AN Minaul Jones

APOLOGY

FOR THE

LIFE

OF

Mr. Colley Cibber, Comedian,

AND

Late PATENTEE of the Theatre-Royal.

With an Historical View of the STAGE during his

WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.

Vivere bis, with posse priore frui.

Mart. lib. z.

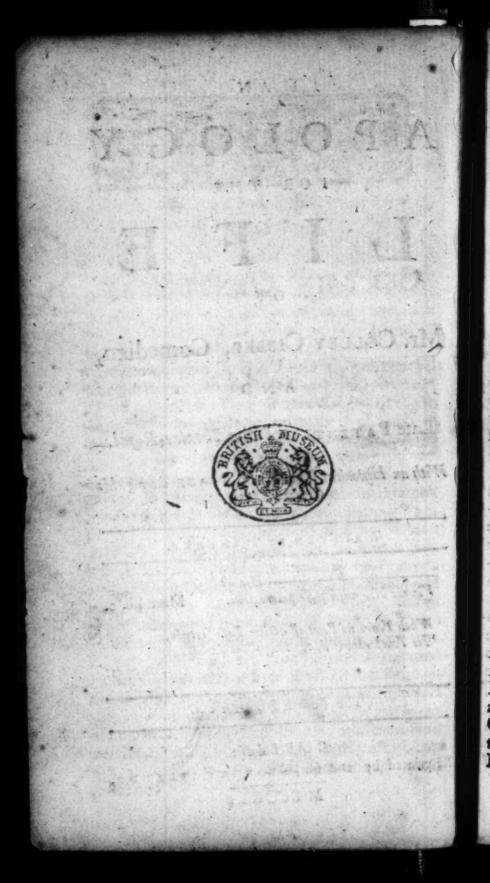

When Years no Part of active Life retain, 'Tis Youth renew'd, to laugh 'em o'er again.

Anonym.

The Fourth EDITION.

DUBLIN:

Re-printed by and for GEORGE FAULKNER,

TO A'

CERTAIN GENTLEMAN.

SIR,

you less Concern, to find your Name in an impertinent Satyre, than before the daintiest Dedication of a modern Author, I conceal it:

Let me talk never fo idly to you, this way; you are, at least, under no necessity of taking it to yourfelf: Nor when I boaft of your Favours, need you blush to have bestow'd them. Or I may now give you all the Attributes, that raife a wife, and good-natur'd Man, to Esteem, and Happiness, and not to be censured as a Flatterer by my own or your Enemies .-- I place my own first; because as they are the greater Number, I am afraid of not paying the greater Respect to them. Yours, if such there are, I imagine are too well-bred to declare themselves : But as there is no Hazard, or visible Terror, in an Attack, upon my defenceless Station, my Censurers have generally been Persons of an intrepid Sincerity. Having therefore that the Door against them, while I am thus privately A a addreffing addressing you, I have little to apprehend, from either of them.

Under this Shelter, then, I may fafely tell you, That the greatest Encouragement, I have had to publish this Work, has rifen from the feveral Hours of Patience you have lent me, at the Reading it. It is true, I took the Advantage of your Leifure, in the Country, where moderate Matters serve for Amusement; and there indeed, how far your Good-nature, for an old Acquaintance, or your Reluctance to put the Vanity of an Author out of Countenance, may have carried you, I cannot be fure; and yet Appearances give me stronger Hopes: For was not the Complaifance of a whole Evening's Attention, as much as an Author of Importance ought to have expected? Why then was I defired the next Day to give you a second Lecture? Or why was I kept a third Day, with you to tell you more of the fame Story? If these Circumstances have made me vain, shall I say, Sir, you are accountable for them? No. Sir, I will rather to far flatter myfelf, as to suppose it posfible, that your having been a Lover of the Stage (and one of those few good Judges who know the Use, and Value of it under a right Regulation) might incline you to think fo copious an Account of it a less tedious Amusement, than it may naturally be, to others of different good Sense, who may have less Concern, or Taste for it. But be all this as it may; the Brat is now born, and rather than fee it flarve, upon the bare Parish Provision, I chuse thus clandestinely, to drop it at your Door, that it may exercise One of your many Virtues, your Charity, in supporting it. 4.119112

If the World were to know, into whole Hands I have thrown it, their Regard to its Patron might incline them, to treat it as One of his Family: But in the Consciousness of what I am, I chuse not, Sir, to say who you are. If your Equal in Rank, were to do publick Tuffice to your Character, then indeed, the Concealment of your Name might be an unneceffary Diffidence: But am I, Sir, of Confequence enough, in any Guise, to do Honour to Mr .- ? Were I to fet him in the most laudable Lights, that Truth, and good Sense could give him, or his own Likeness would require; my officious Mite would be loft in that general Esteem, and Regard, which People of the first Consequence, even of different Parties, have a Pleasure in paying him. Encomiums to Superiors, from Authors of lower Life, as they are naturally liable to Suspicion, can add very little Lustre to what before was visible to the publick Eye: Such Offerings (to use the Style they are generally dress'd in) like Pagan Incense, evaporate, on the Altar, and rather gratify the Priest, than the Deity.

0

9

-

of

.

.

ie

à,

to.

he

Dr

ell

nir.

rill

of-age

WO

ila-

an han

boo

afte

t 19

the

elv.

rcise

in

If

But you, Sir, are to be approach'd in Terms, within the Reach of common Sense: The honest Oblation of a chearful Heart, is as much as you desire; or I'am able to bring you: A Heart, that has just Sence enough, to mix Respect, with Intimacy, and is never more delighted, than when your rural Hours of Leisure admit me, with all my laughing Spirits, to be my idle self, and in the whole Day's Possession of you! Then, indeed, I have Reason to be vain; I am, then, distinguish'd, by a Pleasure too great, to be conceal'd, and could almost

A 3

almost pity the Man of graver Merit, that dares not receive it, with the same unguarded Transport! This Nakedness of Temper the World may place, in what Rank of Folly or Weakness they please; but till Wisdom, can give me something, that will make me more heartily happy, I am content to be gaz'd at, as I am, without lessening my Respect, for those, whose Paffions may be more foberly cover'd.

Yet, Sir, will I not deceive you; 'tis not the Luftre of your publick Merit, the Affluence of your Fortune, your high Figure in Life, nor those Honourable Distinctions, which you had rather deserve than be told of, that have so many Years made my plain Heart hang after you: These are but incidental Ornaments, that; 'tis true, may be of service to you, in the World's Opinion: and though, as one among the Crowd, I may rejoice, that Providence has fo deservedly bestow'd them; yet my particular: Attachment has rifen from a meer natural, and more engaging Charm, The Agreeable Companion! Nor is my Vanity half fo much gratified. in the Honour, as my Sense is in the Delight of your Society! When I fee you lay afide the Advantages of Superiority, and by your own Chearfulness of Spirits, call out all that Nature has given me to meet them; then 'tis I take you! then Life runs high! I defire! I poffes you!

Yet, Sir, in this distinguish'd Happiness, I give not up my farther Share of that Pleasure, or of that Right I have to look upon you, with the publick Eye, and to join in the general Regard so unanimously pay'd to that uncommon Virtue, your Integrity! This, Sir, the World allows so conspicuous a Part of your Character, that,

how-

m

m

Po

CO

ar

cep

the

however invidious the Merit, neither the rude License of Detraction, nor the Prejudice of Party, has, ever once, thrown on it the least Impeachment, or Reproach. This is that commanding Power, that in publick Speaking, makes you heard with such Attention! This it is, that discourages, and keeps filent the Infinuations of Prejudice, and Suspicion; and almost renders your Eloquence an unnecessary Aid, to your Affertions: Even your Opponents, conscious of your Integrity, hear you rather as a Witness, than an Orator---But this, Sir, is drawing you too near the Light, Integrity is too particular a Virtne to be cover'd with a general Application. Let me therefore only talk to your as at Tusculum (for fo I will call that fweet Retreat, which your own Hands have rais'd) where like the fam'd Orator of old, when publick Cares permit, you pass so many rational, unbending Hours: There and at fuch Times, to have been admitted, still plays in my Memory, more like a fictitious, than a real Enjoyment! How many golden Evenings, in that. Theatrical Paradife of water'd Lawns, and hanging Groves, have I walk'd, and prated down the Sun, in focial Happiness! Whether the Retreat of Cicero, in Cost, Magnificence, or curious Luxury of Antiquities, might not out-blaze the simplex Munditus, the modest Ornaments of your Villa, is not within my reading to determine: But that the united Power of Nature, Art, or Elegance of Tafte, could have thrown fo many varied Objects, into a more delightful Harmony, is beyond my Conception.

S

7:

of

-

n

ve:

of

he

rd

r-

WS

at,

W-

When I consider you, in this View, and as the Gentleman of Eminence, surrounded with the general Benevolence of Mankind; I rejoice, Sir, for you, and for myfelf; to fee You, in this particular Light of Merit, and myfelf, sometimes, admitted to my more than equal Share of you.

If this Apology for my past Life, discourages you not, from holding me, in your usual Favour, let me quit this greater Stage, the World, whenever I may, I shall think this the best-acted Part of any I have undertaken, since you first condescended to laugh with,

8 1 R,

Your most obedient,

most oblig'd, and most bumble Servant

November 6,-

COLLEY CIBBER,

The

CONTENTS

CHAP. I.

THE Introduction. The Author's Birth. Various Fortune at School. Not lik'd by those he low'd there. Why. A Digression upon Raillery. The Use and Abuse of it. The Comforts of Folly: Vanity of Greatness. Laughing, no had Philosophy: page 1.

CHAP. II.

He that writes of himself, not easily tir'd. Boys may give Men Lessons. The Author's Preferment at School attended with Missortunes. The Danger of Merit among Equals. Of Satyrists and Buckhiters, What Effect they have had upon the Author. Stanzas publish'd by himself against himself.

P. 18.

CHAP III.

The Author's several Chances for the Church, the Court, and the Army. Going to the University. Met the Re-wollition at Nottingham. Took Arms on that Side. What he saw of it. A sew Political Thoughts. Fortune willing to do for him. His Neglect of her. The Stage preferr'd to all her Favours. The Profession of an Astor consider'd. The Missortunes and Advantages of it.

P. 34.

CHAP. IV.

A short View of the Stage, from the Year 1660. to the Revolution. The King's and Duke's Company united, composed the best Set of English Actors yet known. Their several Theatrical Characters.

p. 53.

CHAP. V.

The Theatrical Characters of the Principal Actors, in the Year 1690 continued. A few Words to Critical Auditors.

p. 72.

CHAP.

The CONTENTS.

CHAP. VI.

The Aathor's first Step upon the Stage. His Discouragements. The best Actors in Europe, ill us'd. A Rewolution, in their Fawour. King William grants them a License to act in Lincolns-Inn-Fields. The Author's Distress, in being thought a worse Actor, than a Boet. Reduc'd to write a Part for himself. His Success. More Remarks, upon Theatrical Action. Some, upon himself.

P. 105.

CHAP. VII.

The State of the Stage continued. The Occasion of Wilks's commencing Actor. His Success. Facts relating to his Theatrical Talent. Actors more or less escent'd from their private Characters.

p. 131.

CHAP. VIII.

The Patentee of Drury-lane, wifer than his Actors. His particular Management. The Author continues to write Plays. Why. The best Dramatick Poets cenfur'd, by J. Collier, in his Short View of the Stage. It has a good Esset. The Master of the Rewels, from that Time, cautious in his licensing new Plays. A Complaint against him. His Authority sounded upon Custom only. The late Law for sixing that Authority, in a proper Person, consider'd.

P. 152.

CHAP. IX.

A small Apology, for writing on. The different State of the two Companies. Wilks invited over from Dublin. Estcourt, from the same Stage, the Winter following. Mrs. Oldfield's first Admission to the Theatre-Royal. Her Character. The great Theatre in the Hay-Market built, for Betterton's Company. It answered not their Expectation. Some Observations upon it. A Theatrical State Secret. P. 172.

CHAP.

7

S

The CONTENTS.

CHAP. X.

The recruited Actors, in the Hay-market, encouraged by a Subscription. Drury-lane, under a particular Management. The Power of a Lord-Chamberlain, over the Theatres, considered. How it had been formerly exercised. A Digression to Tragick Authors. p. 193.

C.H.A.P. XI.

Some, to its Reputation. The Patent unprofitable to all the Proprietors, but one. A fourth Part of it given away to Colonel Brett. A Digression to his Memory. The two Companies of Actors reunited, by his Interest, and Management. The first Direction of Opera's only, given to Mr. Swiney.

P. 207

CHAP. XII.

3.

to

Ž-

e.

m

A

on ty,

2.

ate

ter

the

tre

ti-

72.

P.

Short View of the Opera, when first divided from the Comedy. Plays recover their Credit. The old Patentee uneasy at their Success. Why. The Occasion of Colonel Brett's throwing up his Share in the Patent. The Consequences of it. Anecdotes of Goodman the Actor: The Rate of savourite Actors, in his Time. The Patentees, by endeawouring to reduce their Price, lose them all a second time. The principal Comedians return to the Hay-market in Shares with Swiney. They alter that Theatre. The original and present Form of the Theatre in Drury-lane, compar'd. Opera's fall off. The Occasion of it. Farther Observations upon them. The Patentee disposses of Drury-lane Theatre. Mr. Collier, with a New License, heads the Remains of that Company.

P. 224.

CHAP. XIH.

he Patentee, having now no Actors, rebuilds the new Theatre in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. A Guess at his Reasons for it. More Changes, in the State of the Stage. The Beginning of its better Days, under the Trium-

The CONTENTS.

Triumvirate of Actors. A Sketch of their governing Characters.

CHAP. XIV.

The Stage in its highest Prosperity. The Managers not without Errors. Of subat Kind. Cato sirst acted. What brought it to the Stage. The Company go to Oxford. Their Success and different Auditors there. Booth made a Sharer. Dogget objects to him. Quits the Stage upon his Admittance. That not his true Reafon. What was Dogget's Theatrical Character.

CHAP. XV.

Sir Richard Steele fucceeds Collier, in the Theatre Royal.

Lincoln's-Inn-Fields House rebuilt. The Patent reflored. Eight Astors at once desert from the King's Company. Why: A new Patent obtained by Sir Richard Steele, and assign'd in Shares, to the managing Astors of Drury-lane. Of modern Rantomimes. The Rise of them. Vanity invincible, and assamid. The Non-juror asted. The Author, not forgiven; and rewarded for it.

p. 289.

CHAP. XVI.

The Author steps out of his Way. Pleads his Theatrical Cause in Chancery. Carries it. Plays atted at Hampton-court. Theatrical Anecdotes in former Reigns. Ministers, and Managers always consur'd. The Difficulty of supplying the Stage with good Actors, consider d. Countiers, and Comedians govern'd by the same Rassions. Examples of both. The Author quits the Stage, Why.

. indulated James

The Rolling of the course will be being but the

A N

er

AN

re. its

50.

pal.

ng's Ri-

The

The

89.

l at

rmer

tors,

quits

306.

APOLOGY

FOR THE

LIFE of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c.

CHAP. I.

he Introduction. The Author's Birth. Various Fortune at School. Not lik'd by those he low'd there. Why. A Digression upon Raillery. The Use and Abuse of it. The Comforts of Folly. Vanity and Greatness. Laughing, no had Philosophy.

that one time or other I should give the Publick some Memoirs of my own Life; at which you have never fail'd to laugh, like a Friend, without saying a Word to study me from it; concluding, I suppose, that such wild Thought could not possibly require a serious Aner. But you see I was in earnest. And now you be will will fay, the World will find me, under my own Hand, a weaker Man than perhaps I may have pas'd for, even among my Enemies.——With all my Heart! my Enemies will then read me with Pleasure, and you, perhaps, with Envy, when you find that Follies, without the Reproach of Guilt upon them, are not inconsistent with Happiness.——But why make my Follies publick? Why not? I have pass'd my Time very pleasantly with them, and I don't recollect that they have ever been hurtful to any other Man living. Even admitting they were injudiciously chosen, would it not be Vanity in me to take Shame to myself for not being found a Wise Man? Really, Sir, my Appetites were in too much haste to be happy, to throw away my Time in pursuit of a Name I was fure I could never arrive at.

Now the Follies I frankly confess, I look upon as, in some measure, discharged; while those I conceal are still keeping the Account open between me and my Conscience. To me the Fatigue of being upon a continual Guard to hide them, is more than the Reputation of being without them can repay. If this be Weakness, defendit numerus, I have such comfortable Numbers on my fide, that were all Men to blush, that are not Wife, I am afraid, in Ten, Nine Parts of the World ought to be out of Countenance: But fince that fort of Modesty is what they don't care to come into, why should I be afraid of being star'd at, for not being particular? Or if the Particularity lies in owning my Weakness, will my wiseft Reader be so inhumane as not to pardon it? But if there should be fuch a one, let me, at least, beg him to shew me that strange Man, who is perfect! Is any one more unhappy, more ridiculous, than he who is always labouring to be thought fo, or that is impatient, when he is not thought so? Having brought myself to be easy, under whatever the World may fay of my Undertaking, you may still ask me, why I give myself all this trouble? Is it for Fame, or Profit to myself, or Use or Delight to others? For all these Considerations I have neither neither Fondness nor Indisference: If I obtain none of them, the Amusement, at worst, will be a Reward that must constantly go along with the Labour. But behind all this, there is something inwardly inciting, which I cannot express in few Words; I must therefore a little make bold with your Patience.

d

y

e,

at

n,

'd

re-

ier

fly

to

ir,

to

was

as,

and n a pu-

be rta-

ush,

ts of

But

e to

d at,

lies

be fo ld be

that hap

uring

is not un-

king,

trou-

fe or have either

A Man who has pass'd above Forty Years of his Life upon a Theatre, where he has never appeared to be Himself, may have naturally excited the Curiosity of his Spectators to know what he really was, when in no body's Shape but his own; and whether he, who by his Profession had so long been ridiculing his Benefactors, might not, when the Coat of his Profession was off, deserve to be laugh'd at himself; or from his being often seen in, the most flagrant, and immoral Characters; whether he might not see as great a Rogue, when he look'd into the Glass himself, as when he held it to others.

It was doubtless, from a Supposition that this fort of Curiosity wou'd compensate their Labours, that so many hasty Writers have been encouraged to publish the Lives of the late Mrs. Oldsield, Mr. Wilks, and Mr. Booth, in less time after their Deaths than one cou'd suppose it cost to transcribe them.

Now, Sir, when my Time comes, left they shou'd think it worth while to handle my Memory with the same Freedom, I am willing to prevent its being so odly befmear'd (or at best but slightly white-wash'd) by taking upon me to give the Publick This, as true a Picture of myself as natural Vanity will permit me to draw: For, to promise you that I shall never be vain, were a Promise that, like a Looking-glass too large. might break itself in the making: Nor am I sure I ought wholly to avoid that Imputation, because if Vanity be one of my natural Features, the Portrait wou'd not be like me without it. In a Word, I may palliate, and foften, as much as I please; but, upon an honest Examination of my Heart, I am afraid the same Vanity which makes even homely People employ Painters to preserve a flattering Record of their B 2

Persons, has seduced me to print off this Chairo Oscir-ro of my Mind.

And when I have done it, you may reasonably ask me, of what Importance can the History of my private Life be to the Publick? To this, indeed, I can only make you a ludicrous Answer, which is, That the Publick very well knows, my Life has not been a private one; that I have been employed in their Service, ever fince many of their Grandfathers were young Men: And tho' I have voluntarily laid down my Post, they have a fort of Right to enquire into my Conduct, (for which they have fo well paid me) and to call for the Account of it, during my Share of Administration in the State of the Theatre. This Work, therefore, which, I hope, they will not expect a Man of my hafty Head shou'd confine to any regular Method: (For I shall make no scruple of leaving my History, when I think a Digression may make it lighter, for my Reader's Digestion.) This Work, I fay, shall not only contain the various Impressions of my Mind, (as in Louis the Fourteenth his Cabinet you have feen the growing Medals of his Person from Infancy to Old Age,) but shall likewise include with them the Theatrical History of my Own Time, from my first Appearance on the Stage, to my last Exit.

If then what I shall advance on that Head, may any ways contribute to the Prosperity or Improvement of the Stage in being, the Publick must of consequence

t

b

C

C

to

be

have a Share in its Utility.

This, Sir, is the best Apology I can make for being my own Biographer. Give me leave therefore to open the first Scene of my Life, from the very Day I came into it; and tho' (considering my Profession) I have no reason to be asham'd of my Original; yet I am asraid a plain dry Account of it, will scarce admit of a better Excuse than what my Brother Bays makes for Prince Prettyman in the Rehearsal, viz. I only do it, for fear I should be thought to be no body's Son at all; for if I have led a worthless Life, the Weight of my Pedrigree will not add an Ounce to my intrinsic Value.

But be the Inference what it will, the simple Truth is this.

k

i-

an

at

a

er-

ere wn

ny

to

d-

rk, lan

Ae-

my

it, I

s of

you

In-

nem first

any

t of

ence

eing

0 0-av I

n) I

Iam

of a s for

do it,

all;

f my alue.

But

I was born in London, on the 6th of November, 1671, in Southampton-fireet, facing Southampton-My Father, Caius Gabriel Cibber, was a Native of Holstein, who came into England some time before the Restoration of King Charles II. to follow his Profession, which was that of a Statuary, &c. The Baffo Relievo on the Pedestal of the Great Column in the City, and the two Figures of the Lunaticks, the Raving and the Melancholy, over the Gates of Bethlehem-Hospital, are no ill Monuments of his Fame as an Artist. My Mother was the Daughter of Wiltiam Colley, Esq; of a very antient Family of Glainfton in Rutlandsbire, where she was born. My Mother's Brother, Edward Colley, Esq; (who gave me my Christian Name) being the last Heir Male of it, the Family is now extinct. I shall only add, that in Wright's History of Rutlandshire, publish'd in 1684, the Colley's are recorded as Sheriffs and Members of Parliament from the Reign of Henry VII. to the latter end of Charles I. in whose Cause chiesly Sir Antony Colley, my Mother's Grandfather, funk his Estate from three Thousand, to about three Hundred per Annum.

In the Year 1682, at little more than ten Years of Age, I was fent to the Free-School of Grantham in Lincolnshire, where I staid till I got through it, from the lowest Form to the uppermost. And such Learning as that School could give me, is the most I pretend to (which, tho' I have not utterly forgot; I can not fay I have much improv'd by Study) but even there I remember I was the same inconsistent Creature I have: been ever fince! always in full Spirits, in some small Capacity to do right, but in a more frequent Alacrity to do wrong; and consequently often under a worse Character than I wholly deferv'd: A giddy Negligence always possess'd me, and so much, that I remember I was once whip'd for my Theme, tho' my Master told me, at the same Time, what was good of it was better than any Boy's in the Form. And (whatever B 3 Shame it may be to own it) I have observed the same odd Fate has frequently attended the course of my latter Conduct in Life. The unskilful openness, or in plain Terms, the Indiscretion I have always acted with from my Youth, has drawn more ill-will towards me, than Men of worse Morals and more Wit might have met with. My Ignorance, and want of Jealousy of Mankind has been so strong, that it is with Reluctance I even yet believe any Person, I am acquainted with, can be capable of Envy, Malice, or Ingratitude: And to shew you what a Mortification it was to me, in my very boyish Days, to find my self mistaken, give me leave to tell you a School-story.

A great Boy, near the Head taller than my felf, in fome wrangle at play had infulted me; Upon which I was fool-hardy enough to give him a box on the Ear; the blow was foon return'd with another, that brought me under him, and at his Mercy. Another Lad, whom I really lov'd, and thought a good-natur'd one, cry'd out with some warmth, to my Antagonist (while I was down) beat him, beat him foundly! This fo amaz'd me, that I loft all my Spirits to refift, and burft into Tears! When the Fray was over, I took my Friend afide, and ask'd him, how he came to be so earnestly against me? To which, with some glouting Confusion, he reply'd, because you are always jeering, and making a Jest of me to every Boy in the School. Many a Mischief have I brought upon myself by the same Folly in riper Whatever Reason I had to reproach my Companion's declaring against me, I had none to wonder at it, while I was so often hurting him: Thus I deserv'd his Enmity, by my not having Sense enough to know I bad hurt him; and he hated me, because he had not Sense enough to know, that I never intended to hurt him.

As this is the first remarkable Error of my Life, I can recollect, I cannot pass it by without throwing out some farther Reflections upon it; whether flat or spirited, new or common, salse or true, right or wrong, they will be still my own, and consequently like me; I will therefore boldly go on; for I am only o blig'd

t

to ne

er

in

m

an

net

n-

e-

an

to

ve-

me

in

hI

ar;

ght

om

out

was

me,

ars!

and

ne?

y'd,

it of nave

iper

om-

er at rv'd

now

had

ed to

I can

out

fpin-

rong

like ly o

blig'd to give you my own, and not a good Picture, to she was well the Weakness, as the Strength of my Understanding. It is not on what I write, but on my Reader's Curiosity I relie to be read through: At worst, though the Impartial may be tir'd, the Ill-natur'd (no small number) I know will see the bottom of me.

What I observ'd then, upon my having undefignedly provok'd my School-Friend into an Enemy, is a common Case in Society; Errors of this kind often four the Blood of Acquaintance into an inconceivable Aversion, where it is little suspected. It is not enough to fay of your Raillery, that you intended no Offence; if the Person you offer it to has either a wrong Head, or wants a Capacity to make that diffinetion, it may have the same effect as the Intention of the groffest Injury: And in reality, if you know his Parts are too flow to return it in kind, it is a vain and idle Inhumanity, and fometimes draws the Aggressor into difficulties not eafily got out of: Or to give the Case more scope, suppose your Friend may have a passive Indulgence for your Mirth, if you find him filent at it; tho' you were as intrepid as Cafar, there can be no Excuse for your not leaving it off. When you are conscious that your Antagonist can give as well as take, then indeed the smarter the Hit the more agreeable the Party: A Man of chearful Sense, among Friends will never be grave upon an Attack of this kind, but rather thank you that you have given him a Right to be even with you: There are few Men (tho' they may be Masters of both) that on such occasions had not rather shew their Parts than their Courage, and the Preference is just: a Bull dog may have one, and only a Man can have the other. Thus it happens, that in the coarse Merriment of common People, when the Jest begins to swell into earnest; for want of this Election you may observe, he that has least Wit generally gives the first blow. Now, as among the better fort. a readiness of Wit is not always a Sign of intrinsic Merit; so the want of that readiness is no Reproach to a Man of plain Sense and Civility, who therefore (methinks)

The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c.

(methinks) should never have these lengths of Liberty taken with him. Wit there becomes abfurd, if not infolente ill-natur'd I am fure it is, which Imputation a generous Spirit will always avoid, for the fame reafon that a Man of real Honour will never fend a Challenge to a Cripple. The inward Wounds that are given by the inconsiderate Insults of Wit, to those that want it, are as dangerous as those given by Oppression to Inferiors; as long in healing, and perhaps never forgiven. There is befides (and little worse than this) a mutual Groffness in Raillery, that sometimes is more painful to the Hearers that are not concern'd in it, than to the Persons engag'd. I have seen a couple of these clumfy Combatants drub one another with as little Manners or Mercy, as if they had two Flails in their Hands, Children at play with Cafe-knives could not give you more Apprehension of their doing one another a Mischief. And yet when the Contest has been over, the Boobies have look'd round them for Approbation, and upon being told they were admirably well match'd, have fat down (bedawb'd as they were) contented, at making it a drawn Battle. After all that I have faid, there is no clearer way of giving Rules for Raillery than by Example.

There are two Persons now living, who, tho' very different in their manner, are, as sar as my Judgment reaches, complete Masters of it; the one of a more polite and extensive Imagination, the other of a Knowledge more closely useful to the Business of Life: The one gives you perpetual Pleasure, and seems always to be taking it; the other seems to take none, till his Business is over, and then gives you as much as if Pleasure were his only Business. The one enjoys his Fortune, the other thinks it first necessary to make it; though that he will enjoy it then, I cannot be positive, because when a Man has once pick'd up more than he wants, he is apt to think it a Weakness to suppose he has enough. But as I don't remember ever to have seen these Gentlemen in the same Company, you must give me leave to take them feparately.

The

th

tr

kn

af

ny

tro

pui

to l

Dol

whe

ay,

hat

Gen

ome

ave

,

Having

The first of them, then, has a Title, and—no matter what; I am not to speak of the great, but the happy part of his Character, and in this one fingle light; not of his being an illustrious, but a delightful Companion.

-

n

11

1-

at

es

ry

nt

re

e:

al-

ne,

as his

it;

ve,

he

he

ave

auft

The

In Conversation he is seldom filent but when he is attentive, nor ever speaks without exciting the Attention of others; and tho' no Man might with less difpleasure to his Hearers, engross the Talk of the Company, he has a Patience in his Vivacity that chuses to divide it, and rather gives more Freedom than he takes; his sharpest Replies having a mixture of Politeness that few have the command of; his Expression is easy, short, and clear; a stiff or study'd Word never comes from him; it is in a fimplicity of Style that he gives the highest Surprize, and his Ideas are always adapted to the Capacity and Tafte of the Person he fpeaks to: Perhaps you will understand me better if I give you a particular Instance of it. A Person at the University, who from being a Man of Wit, easily became one his Acquaintance there, from that Acquaintance found no difficulty in being made one of his Chaplains: This Person afterwards leading a Life that did no great Honour to his Cloth, oblig'd his Patron to take some gentle notice of it; but as his Patron knew the Patient was squeamish, he was introduc'd to sweeten the Medicine to his Taste, and therefore with a smile of good-humour told him, that if to the many Vices he had already he would give himself the trouble to add one more, he did not doubt but his Reputation might still be set up again. Sir Crape, who tould have no Aversion to so pleasant a Dose, desiring to know what it might be, was answered, Hypocrify, Doctor, only a little Hypocrify ? This plain Reply can heed no Comment; but ex pede Herculem, he is every where proportionable. I think I have heard him fince ay, the Doctor thought Hypocrify so detestable a Sin hat he dy'd without committing it- In a word, this Gentleman gives Spirit to Society the Moment he omes into it, and whenever he leaves it, they who ave Business have then leisure to go about it.

Having often had the Honour to be my felf the Butt of his Raillery, I must own I have receiv'd more Pleasure from his lively manner of raising the Laugh against me, than I could have felt from the smoothest statery of a serious Civility. Tho' Wit slows from him with as much ease as common Sense from another, he is so little elated with the Advantage he may have over you, that whenever your good Fortune gives it against him, he seems more pleas'd with it on your side than his own. The only advantage he makes of his Superiority of Rank is, that by always waving it himself, his inferior finds he is under the greater Obligation not to forget it.

When the Conduct of focial Wit is under such Regulations, how delightful must those Convivia, those Meals of Conversation be, where such a Member presides; who can with so much ease (as Shakespear phrases it) set the Table in a roar. I am in no pain that these impersect Out-lines will be apply'd to the Person I mean, because every one that has the Happiness to know him, must know how much more in this particular Attitude is wanting to be like him.

The other Gentleman, whose bare Interjections of Laughter have Humour in them, is so far from having a Title, that he has loft his real name, which some Years ago he fuffer'd his Friends to railly him out of; in lieu of which they have equipp'd him with one they thought had a better found in good Company. He is the first Man of so sociable a Spirit, that I ever knew capable of quitting the Allurements of Wit and Pleafure, for a strong Application to Business; in his Youth (for there was a Time when he was young) he fet out in all the hey-day Expences of a modish Man of Fortune; but finding himself over-weighed with Appetites, he grew restiff, kick'd up in the middle of the Course, and turn'd his Back upon his Frolicks 2. broad, to think of improving his Estate at home: In order to which he clapt Collars upon his Coach-horfes, and that their Mettle might not run over other People, he ty'd a Plough to their Tails, which tho' it might give them a more flovenly Air, would enable him

W

of for

he

im to keep them fatter in a foot pace, with a whiftling eafant besides them, than in a full trot, with a hoteaded Coach-man behind them. In these unpolite Amusements he has laugh'd like a Rake, and look'd aout him like a Farmer for many Years. As his Rank nd Station often find him in the best Company, his afy Humour, whenever he is called to it, can still nake himself the Fiddle of it.

16

re

h aft.

m

r,

0-

a-

de

MIS

m-

tile-

ofe

re-

ear

hat

er-

ness

ar-

s of

ing

ome

of

hey

le is new

lea-

his

) he

Man

with le of

S 2.

: In

orles,

Peo.

no' it

nable him

And tho' fome fay, he looks upon the Follies of the World like too severe a Philosopher, yet he rather huses to laugh, than to grieve at them; to pass his ime therefore more easily in it, he often endeavours to onceal himself, by affurning the Air and Talte of a Man in fashion; fo that his only Uneasiness feems to e, that he can't quite prevail with his Friends to think im a worse Manager, than he really is; for they cary their Raillery to fuch a height, that it sometimes iles to a Charge of downright Avarice against him. Jpon which head it is no easy matter to be more mery upon him, than he will be upon himself. Thus while he fets that Infirmity in a pleasant Light, he so lifarms your Prejudice that, if he has it not, you can't ind in your Heart to wish he were without it. Whenver he is attack'd where he feems to lie fo open, if is Wit happens not to be ready for you, he receives ou with an affenting Laugh, till he has gain'd time to whet it sharp enough for a Reply, which seldom turns out to his disadvantage. If you are too firing for him which may possibly happen from his being oblig'd to lesend the weak side of the Question) his last Recourse s to join in the Laugh, till he has got himself off by in ironical Applause of your Superiority.

If I were capable of Envy, what I have observ'd of this Gentleman would certainly incline me to it; or fure to get through the necessary Cares of Life. with a Train of Pleasures at our Heels, in vain calling ther us, to give a constant Preference to the Business of he Day, and yet be able to laugh while we are about t, to make even Society the subservient Reward of it. s a State of Happiness which the gravest Precepts of noral Wisdom will not easily teach us to exceed. When

I speak of Happiness, I go no higher than that which is contain'd in the World we now tread upon; and when I speak of Laughter, I don't simply mean that which every Oaf is capable of, but that which has its sensible Motive and proper Season, which is not more limited than recommended by that indulgent Philosophy,

Cum ratione infanire.

When I look into my present Self, and afterwards cast my Eye round all my Hopes, I don't see any one Purfuit of them that shou'd so reasonably rouze me out of a Nod in my Great Chair, as a call to those agreeable Parties I have sometimes the Happiness to mix with, where I always affert the equal Liberty of leaving them, when my Spirits have done their best with them.

Now, Sir, as I have been making my way for above forty Years through a Crowd of Cares, (all which, by the Favour of Providence, I have honeftly got rid of) is it a Time of Day for me to leave off these Fooleries, and to set up a new Character? Can it be worth my while to waste my Spirits, to bake my Blood, with serious Contemplations, and perhaps impair my Health, in the fruitless Study of advancing myself into the better Opinion of those very—very sew wise Men that are as old as I am? No, the Part I have acted in real Life, shall be all of a piece.

-Servetur ad imum, Qualis ab incepto processerit.

Hor.

I will not go out of my Character, by straining to be wiser than I can be, or by being more affectedly pensive than I need be; whatever I am, Men of Sense will know me to be, put on what Disguise I will; I can no more put off my Follies, than my Skin; I have often try'd, but they stick too close to me; nor am I sure my Friends are displeas'd with them; for, besides that in this Light I afford them frequent matter of Mirth, they may possibly be less uneasy at their own Foibles,

ch

nd

nat

its ore

10-

caft,

un

of

ble

ith,

ing

ith

2-

(all ftly

refe

: be

my

im

ing

ery

t I

or.

be

en-

will

can

ave

n I

ides ot

FW#

les,

oibles, when they have so old a Precedent to keep tem in countenance: Nay, there are some frank though to confess, they envy what they laugh at; and then I have seen others, whose Rank and Fortune have id a sort of Restraint upon their Liberty of pleasing eir Company, by pleasing themselves, I have said still to myself, — Well, there is some Advantage having neither Rank nor Fortune! Not but there e among them a third Sort, who have the particular appiness of unbending into the very Wantonness of cood-humour, without depreciating their Dignity: e that is not Master of that Freedom, let his Condition be never so exalted, must still want something to me up to the Happiness of his Inferiors who enjoy

If Socrates cou'd take pleasure in playing at Even Odd with his Children, or Agesilaus divert himself riding the Hobby-horse with them, am I obliged to as eminent as either of them before I am as frolickne? If the Emperor Adrian, near his death, cou'd sy with his very Soul, his Animula, &c. and regret at it cou'd be no longer companionable; if Greats, at the same Time, was not the Delight he was so h to part with, sure then these chearful Amusements m contending for, must have no inconsiderable share our Happiness; he that does not chuse to live his n way, suffers others to chuse for him. Give me Joy I always took in the End of an old Song,

My Mind, my Mind is a Kingdom to me.

I can please myself with my own Follies, have not plentiful Provision for Life? If the World thinks a Trisler, I don't desire to break in upon their Wisn; let them call me any Fool, but an unchearful! I live as I write; while my Way amuses me, as well as I wish it; when another writes better, I like him too, tho' he shou'd not like me. Not our at Imitator of Horace himself can have more Pleasin writing his Verses, than I have in reading them, I sometimes find myself there (as Shakespear terms dispraisingly spoken of: If he is a little free with me, I am generally in good company, he is as blunt with my betters; fo that even here I might laugh in my turn. My Superiors, perhaps, may be mended by him; but, for my part, I own myself incorrigible: look upon my Follies as the best part of my Fortune, and am more concern'd to be a good Husband of them than of that; nor do I believe I shall ever be rhim's out of them. And, if I don't mistake, I am supported in my way of thinking by Horace himself, who, in excus of a loofe Writer, fays, Prætulerim scriptor delirus, inersque videri, Dum mea delectent, mala me, aut denique fallant, Quam sapere, et ringiwhich, to speak of myself as a loose Philosopher, have thus ventur'd to imitate:

Me, while my laughing Follies can deceive, Blest in the dear Delirium let me live, Rather than wifely know my Wants, and grieve.

We had once a merry Monarch of our own, wh thought chearfulness so valuable a Blessing, that he would have quitted one of his Kingdoms where h cou'd not enjoy it : where, among many other has Conditions they had ty'd him to, his fober Subject wou'd not fuffer him to laugh on a Sunday; and the this might not be the avow'd Cause of his Elopement I am not fure, had he had no other, that this alon might not have ferv'd his turn; at least, he has m hearty Approbation either way; for had I been under the same Restriction, tho' my staying were to har made me his Successor, I shou'd rather have chosens follow him.

How far his Subjects might be in the right, is no my Affair to determine; perhaps they were wifer that the Frogs in the Fable, and rather chose to have Log, than a Stork for their King; yet I hope it wi be no Offence to fay, that King Log himself must have made but a very simple Figure in History.

The Man who chuses never to laugh, or whose becalm'd Passions know no Motion, seems to me only in the quiet State of a green Tree; he vegetates, 'tis rue, but shall we say he lives? Now, Sir, for Amusement.—Reader, take heed! for I find a ftrong impulse to talk impertinently; if therefore you are not s fond of feeing, as I am of shewing myself in all my Lights, you may turn over two Leaves together, nd leave what follows to those who have more Curifity, and less to do with their Time, than you have. -As I was faying then, let us, for Amusement, adance this, or any other Prince, to the most glorious Throne, mark out his Empire in what Clime you leafe, fix him on the highest Pinnacle of unbounded Power; and in that State let us enquire into his degree f Happines; make him at once the Terror and the Invy of his Neighbours, fend his Ambition out to War, nd gratify it with extended Fame and Victories; ring him in triumph home, with great unhappy Capives behind him, through the Acclamations of his eople, to reposses his Realms in Peace. Well, then the Dust has been brusht from his Purple, what vill he do next? Why, this envy'd Monarch (whom e will allow to have a more exalted Mind than to e delighted with the trifling Flatteries of a congratuting Circle) will chuse to retire, I presume, to enjoy private the Contemplation of his Glory; an Amusetent, you will fay, that well becomes his Station! ut there, in that pleasing Rumination, when he has hade up his new Account of Happiness, how much, ray, will be added to the Balance more than as it ood before his last Expedition? From what one Article ill the Improvement of it appear? Will it arise from he conscious Pride of having done his weaker Enemy Injury? Are his Eyes fo dazzled with false Glory, at he thinks it a less Crime in him to break into the alace of his princely Neighbour, because he gave him me to defend it, than for a Subject feloniously to pluner the House of a private Man? Or is the Outrage Hunger and Necessity more enormous than the Rage of Ambition? Let us even suppose the wicked C 2

1

ler, lunt

k in d by

e:I

une nem.

im'd

orted

CUE

at he han d the ement

unde o havi

, is no er that have it wil

ift have

Th

Usage of the World, as to that point, may keep his Conscience quiet; still, what is he to do with the infinite Spoil that his imperial Rapine has brought home? Is he to fit down, and vainly deck himself with the Jewels which he has plunder'd from the Crown of another, whom Self-defence had compell'd to oppose him? No, let us not debase his Glory into so low a Weakness. What Appetite, then, are these shining Treafures food for ? Is their vast Value in seeing his vulgar Subjects stare at them, wife Men smile at them, or his Children play with them? or can the new Extent of his Dominions add a Cubit to his Happiness? Was not his Empire wide enough before to do good in? And can it add to his Delight that now no Monarch has fuch room to do mischief in? But farther; if even the great Augustus, to whose Reign such Praises are given, cou'd not enjoy his Days of Peace, free from the Terrors of repeated Conspiracies, which lost him more Quiet to suppress, than his Ambition cost him What human Eminence is fecure? to provoke them. In what private Cabinet then must this wondrous Monarch lock up his Happiness, that common Eyes are never to behold it? Is it like his Person, a Prisoner to its own Superiority? Or does he at last poorly place it in the Triumph of his injurious Devastations? One Moment's Search into himself will plainly shew him, that real and reasonable Happiness can have no Existence without Innocence and Liberty. What a Mockery is Greatness without them? How lonesome must be the Life of that Monarch, who, while he governs only by being fear'd, is restrain'd from letting down his Grandeur fometimes to forget himself, and to humanize him into the Benevolence and Joy of Society ? To throw off his cumbersome Robe of Majesty to be a Man without Disguise, to have a sensible Taste of Life in its Simplicity, till he confess, from the sweet Experience, that dulce est desipere in loco, was no Fool's Philofophy. Or if the gawdy Charms of Pre-eminence are fo strong that they leave him no Sense of a less pompous, tho' a more rational Enjoyment, none fure can envy him, but those who are the Dupes of an equally fan-My taffick Ambition.

his

in-

ne?

the

no-

m?

ak-

rea-

vul-

em,

Ex-

efs ?

in?

arch

ven

rom

him

him

ire?

Mo-

are er to it in

Mo-

that

ence

ry is

e the y by

his

uma-

? To

Man

ife in peri-

hilo-

pous, envy fan-My My Imagination is quite heated and fatigued, in dressing up this Phantome of Felicity; but I hope it has not made me so far misunderstood, as not to have allow'd, that in all the Dispensations of Providence, the Exercise of a great and virtuous Mind is the most elevated State of Happiness: No, Sir, I am not for setting up Gaiety against Wisdom; nor for preferring the Man of Pleasure to the Philosopher; but for shewing, that the wisest, or greatest Man, is very near an unhappy Man, if the unbending Amusements I am contending for, are not sometimes admitted to relieve him.

How far I may have over-rated these Amusements, let graver Casuists decide; whether they affirm, or reject, what I have afferted, hurts not my Purpose, which is not to give Laws to others; but to shew by what Laws I govern myself: If I am misguided, 'tis Nature's Fault, and I follow her, from this Persuasion: That as Nature has distinguish'd our Species from the mute Creation, by our Risibility, her Design must have been, by that Faculty, as evidently to raise our Happiness, as by our Os Sublime (our erected Faces) to lift the Dignity of our Form above them.

Notwithstanding all I have said, I am afraid there is in absolute Power, in what is simply call'd our Constitution, that will never admit of other Rules for Happiness, than her own; from which (be we never so wise or weak) without Divine Assistance, we only can reteive it: So that all this my Parade, and Grimace of Philosophy, has been only making a mighty Merit of following my own Inclination. A very natural Vality! Though it is some sort of Satisfaction to know the does not impose upon me. Vanity again! However, think it what you will that has drawn me into this copious Digression, 'tis now high time to drop it: shall therefore in my next Chapter return to my chool, from whence, I fear, I have too long been truant.

CHAP II.

He that writes of himself, not easily tir'd.
Boys may give Men Lessons. The Author's Preferment at School attended with Missor. tunes. The Danger of Merit among Equals.
Of Satyrists and Backbiters. What Essent they have had upon the Author. Stanzas publish'd by himself against himself.

I have fate myself down, to write my own Life; nay, and with less concern for what may be said of it, than I should feel, were I to do the same for a deceas'd Acquaintance. This you will easily account for when you consider, that nothing gives a Coxcomb more Delight, than when you suffer him to talk of himself; which sweet Liberty I here enjoy for a whole Volume together! A Privilege, which neither cou'd be allowed me, nor wou'd become me to take, in the Companyl am generally admitted to; but here, where I have all the Talk to myself, and have no body to interrupt of contradict me, sure, to say, whatever I have a mind other People shou'd know of me, is a Pleasure which none but Authors, as vain as myself, can conceive.—But to my History.

However little worth notice the Life of a Schoolboy may be supposed to contain: yet, as the Passionso Men and Children have much the same Motives, and differ very little in their Effects, unless where the olden Experience may be able to conceal them: As therefore what arises from the Boy, may possibly be a Lesson we the Man, I shall venture to relate a Fact, or two, the happen'd while I was fill at School.

In February, 1684-5, died King Charles II. wh being the only King I had ever seen, I remembe (young as I was) his Death made a strong Impression upon me, as it drew Tears from the Eyes of Multitude

W

B

an

ma Wa

tudes, who look'd no further into him than I did : But it was, then, a fort of a School-Doctrine to regard our Monarch as a Deity; as in the former Reign it was to infift he was accountable to this World, as well as to that above him. But what, perhaps, gave King Charles II. this peculiar Poffession of so many Hearts, was his affable and eafy manner in converfing; a Quality that goes farther with the greater Part of mankind than many higher Virtues, which, in a Prince, might more immediately regard the publick Prosperity. Even his indolent Amusement of playing with his Dogs, and feeding his Ducks, in St. James's Park, (which I have feen him do) made the common People adore him, and confequently overlook in him, what, in a Prince of a different Temper, they might have been out of humour at.

ors

forials.

Tea

1241

tedly

ife;

id of

a de-

t for,

more

felf;

lume

low'

anyl

re all

ipt of mind

y hid

ve.-

hool

onso

2D

older

refort

on to

, tha

Wh

embe

Viulti

I cannot help remembring one more Particular in those Times, tho' it be quite foreign to what will sollow. I was carry'd by my Father to the Chappel in Whitehall; where I saw the King, and his Royal Brother the then Duke of York, with him in the Closet, and present during the whole Divine Service. Such Dispensation, it seems, for his Interest, had that unhappy Prince, from his real Religion, to assist at another, to which his Heart was so utterly averse.—I now proceed to the Facts I promis'd to speak of.

King Charles his Death was judg'd, by our School-master, a proper Subject to lead the Form I was in, into a higher Kind of Exercise; he therefore enjoin'd us, severally, to make his Funeral Oration: This sort of Task, so entirely New to us all, the Boys receiv'd with Astonishment, as a Work above their Capacity; and tho' the Master persisted in his Command, they one and all, except my self, resolv'd to decline it. But I, Sir, who was ever giddily forward, and thoughtless of Consequences, set my self roundly to work, and got through it as well as I could. I remember to this Hour, that single Topick of his Assability (which made me mention it before) was the chief Motive that warm'd me into the Undertaking; and to shew how very childish a Notion I had of his Character at that time, I rais'd his Humanity, and Love of those who ferv'd him, to fuch height, that I imputed his Death to the Shock he receiv'd from the Lord Arlington's being at the point of Death, about a Week before him. This Oration, fuch as it was, I produc'd the next Morning: All the other Boys pleaded their Inability, which the Master taking rather as a mark of their Modesty than their Idleness, only seem'd to punish, by setting me at the Head of the Form : Preferment dearly bought! Much happier had I been to have funk my Performance in the general Modesty of declining it. A most uncomfortable Life I led among 'em, for many a Day after! I was fo jeer'd, laugh'd at, and hated as a pragmatical Bastard (Schoolboys Language) who had betray'd the whole Form, that scarce any of 'em would keep me company; and tho' it so far advanc'd me into the Master's Favour, that he would often take me from the School, to give me an Airing with him on Horse-back, while they were left to their Lessons; you may be fure, such envy'd Happiness did not encrease their Good-will to me: Notwithstanding which, my Stupidity cou'd take no warning from their Treatment, An Accident of the same Nature happen'd soon after, that might have frighten'd a Boy of a meek Spirit, from attempting any Thing above the lowest Capacity. On the 23d of April following, being the Coronation-day, of the new King, the school petition'd the Master for leave to play; to which he agreed, provided any of the Boys wou'd produce an English Ode upon that Occasion. The very Word, Ode, I know, makes you fmile already; and fo it does me; not only because it still makes so many poor Devils turn Wits upon it, but from a more agreeable Motive; from a Reflection of how little I then thought that, half a Century afterwards, I shou'd be call'd upon twice a Year, by my Post, to make the same Kind of Oblations to an unexceptionable Prince, the serene Happiness of whose Reign my halting Rhimes are still so unequal This, I own, is Vanity without Disguise; but, Hac

hat

ho

ath on's

ore

the

In-

ark

d to

Pren to

efty

daer'd,

001-orm,

and

our, give

they fuch ll to take nt of

have oting

ad of the leave

y of that nakes cause

upon

eflec-

Cen-

Year,

ons to

ess of requal

; but, Hat

affumes

Hec olim meminisse juvat: The Remembrance of the niferable Prospect we had then before us, and have ince escap'd by a Revolution, is now a Pleasure, which, without that Remembrance, I could not fo eartily have enjoy'd. The Ode I was speaking of ell to my lot, which, in about half an Hour I prouc'd. I cannot fay it was much above the merry Style f Sing! Sing the Day, and fing the Song, in the arce: Yet, bad as it was, it ferv'd to get the School Play-day, and to make me not a little vain upon it; which last Effect so disgusted my Play-fellows, that hey left me out of the Party I had most mind to be f, in that Day's Recreation. But their Ingratitude rv'd only to increase my Vanity; for I consider'd hem as fo many beaten Tits, that had just had the sortification of seeing my Hack of a Pegasus come before them. This low Paffron is fo rooted in our lature, that fometimes riper Heads cannot govern it. have met with much the fame filly fort of Coldness. en from my Cotemporaries of the Theatre, from aving the superfluous Capacity of writing my self the haracters I have acted.

Here, perhaps, I may again feem to be vain; but all these Facts are true (as true they are) how can help it? Why am I oblig'd to conceal them? The erit of the best of them is not so extraordinary as to ave warn'd me to be nice upon it; and the Praise e to them is fo small a Fish, it was scarce worth hile to throw my Line into the Water for it. If I nfess my Vanity while a Boy, can it be Vanity, hen a Man, to remember it? And if I have a toleble Feature, will not that as much belong to my cture, as an Imperfection? In a Word, from what have mentioned, I wou'd observe only this; That hen we are conscious of the least comparative merit ourselves, we should take as much care to conceal e Value we set upon it, as if it were a real Defect: be elated, or vain upon it, is shewing your Moy before people in want; ten to one, but some, ho may think you have too much, may borrow, or ck your Pocket before you get home. He who assumes Praise to himself, the World will think overpays himself. Even the Suspicion of being vain, ought as much to be dreaded as the Guilt itself. Cafar was of the same Opinion, in regard to his Wife's Chastity. Praise, tho' it may be our due, is not like a Bank Bill, to be paid upon Demand; to be valuable, it must be voluntary. When we are dun'd for it, we have a Right and Privilege to refuse it. If Compulsion infifts upon it, it can only be paid as Persecution in Points of Faith is, in a counterseit Coin: And who, ever, believ'd occasional Conformity to be fincere? Nero, the most vain Coxcomb of a Tyrant that ever breath'd, cou'd not raise an unfeigned Applause to his Harp by military Execution: Even where praise is deserved, Ill-nature and self-conceit (Passions, that poll a majority of mankind) will with less reluctance part with their Money, than their Approbation. Men of the greatest merit are forc'd to flay 'till they die, before the World will fairly make up their Account : Then, indeed, you have a Chance for your full Due, because it is less grudg'd when you are incapable of enjoying it: Then, perhaps, even Malice shall heap Praises upon your Memory; tho' not for your fake, but that your surviving Competitors may fuffer by a Comparison. 'Til from the same Principle that Satyr shall have a thoufand Readers, where Panegyric has one. When I therefore find my Name at length, in the fatyrical Works of our most celebrated living Author, I never look upon those Lines as Malice meant to me, (for he knows I never provok'd it) but profit to himfelf: One of his Points must be, to have many Readers: He confiders that my Face and Name are more known than those of many Thousands of more consequence in the Kingdom: That therefore, right or wrong, a Lick at the Laureat will always be a fure bait, ad captandum vulgus, to catch him little Readers: And that to gratify the unlearned, by now and then intersperfing those merry Sacrifices of an old Acquaintance to their Taste, is a piece of quite right poetical Crast. But

But as a little bad Poetry, is the greatest Crime he lays to my charge, I am willing to subscribe to his Opinion of it. That this fort of Wit is one of the easiest ways too, of pleasing the generality of Readers, is evident from the comfortable Subsistence which our weekly Retailers of Politicks have been known to pick up, merely by making bold with a Government that had unfortunately neglected to find their Genius a beter Employment.

er-

in,

far

fe's

ike

ua-

for

If

as feit

for-

o of

un-

on:

con-

will

heir

b'orc'd

airly

re a

dg'd

per-

Me-

urvi-

Ti

thou-

en I

rical

never

, (for

iself:

ders:

nown

nce in

Lick

aptan-

that

riper-

nce to

aft.

But

Hence too arises all that flat poverty of Censure and nvective, that so often has a Run in our publick Paers, upon the Success of a new Author; when, God nows, there is feldom above one Writer among hunreds in being at the fame time, whose Satyr a Man of ommon Sense ought to be mov'd at. When a Master n the Art is angry, then, indeed, we ought to be aarm'd! How terrible a Weapon is Satyr in the Hand f a great Genius? Yet even there, how liable is Predice to misuse it? How far, when general, it may form our Morals, or what Cruelties it may inict by being angrily particular, is perhaps above my each to determine. I shall therefore only beg leave interpose what I feel for others, whom it may pernally have fallen upon. When I read those mortiing Lines of our most eminent Author, in his Chacter of Atticus (Atticus, whose Genius in Verse, nd whose Morality in Prose, has been so justly admir'd) ough I am charm'd with the poetry, my Imagiation is hurt at the Severity of it; and tho' I allow e Satyrist to have had personal provocation, yet, ethinks, for that very Reason, he ought not to have oubled the publick with it: For as it is observ'd in e 242d Tattler, " In all Terms of Reproof, where the Sentence appears to arise from personal Hatred, or Passion, it is not then made the Cause of Mankind, but a Misunderstanding between two Perfons." But if such kind of Satyr has its incontestae Greatness; if its exemplary Brightness may not islead inferior Wits into a barbarous Imitation of its verity, then I have only admir'd the Verses, and exs'd myself, by bringing them under so scrupulous a Reflection:

Reflection: But the pain which the Acrimony of their Verses gave me, is, in some measure, allay'd, in sinding that this inimitable Writer, as he advances in Years, has since had Candour enough to celebrate the same Person for his visible merit. Happy Genius whose Verse, like the Eye of Beauty, can heal the deepest Wounds with the least Glance of Favour.

Since I am got so far into this Subject, you mu give me leave to go thro' all I have a mind to fay up on it; because I am not fure, that in a more proper place, my memory may be fo full of it. I cannot find, therefore, from what Reason, Satyr is allow's more Licence than Comedy, or why either of then (to be admir'd) ought not to be limited by Decenq and Justice. Let Juvenal and Aristophanes have take what Liberties they please, if the Learned have no thing more than their Antiquity to justify their laying about them, at that enormous rate, I shall will they had a better Excuse for them! The personal Ridcule and Scurrility thrown upon Socrates, which Pla tarch too condemns; and the Boldness of Juvenal, i writing real Names over guilty Characters, I cannot think are to be pleaded in right of our modern Liber ties of the same Kind. Facit indignatio versum, may be a very spirited Expression, and seems to gives Reader hopes of a lively Entertainment: But I am a fraid Reproof is in unequal Hands, when Anger is its Executioner; and tho' an outrageous Invective may carry fome Truth in it, yet it will never have that natural, eafy credit with us, which we gave to the laughing Ironies of a cool Head. The Satyr that can fmile circum præcordia ludit, and feldom fails to bring the Reader quite over to his Side, whenever Ridicule and Folly are at variance. But when a Person satyriz'd is us'd with the extremest Rigour, he may sometimes meet with Compassion, instead of Contempt, and throw back the Odium that was defign'd for him, upon the Author, When I would therefore difarm the Satyrist of this In dignation, I mean little more, than that I wou'd take from him all private or personal prejudice, and wou'd ful leave their

find-

es i

e the

ius!

1 the mu

y up roper

nno

OW'

then

ency

ake

e no-

lay-

with

Ridi

Pla

al, 1

annot

iber

may gives am a ger i

e may

that

o the

at can ng the

le and is us'd

t with

k the

uthor.

is In-

from

d ftill

leave

we him as much general Vice to scourge as he plea, and that with as much Fire and Spirit as Art and ature demand to enliven his Work, and keep his ader awake.

Against all this it may be objected, That these are ws, which none but phlegmatick Writers will obve, and only Men of Eminence should give. I ant it, and therefore only fubmit them to Writers of ter Judgment. I pretend not to restrain others m chufing what I don't like; they are welcome (if ev please too) to think I offer these Rules, more from Incapacity to break them, than from a moral Hunity. Let it be fo! still, That will not weaken firength of what I have afferted, if my Affertion true. And though I allow, that provocation is not t to weigh out its refentments by Drachms and ruples, I shall still think, that no publick Revenge be honourable, where it is not limited by Justice; d if Honour is infatiable in its Revenge, it loses at it contends for, and finks itself, if not into Cruy, at least into Vain-glory.

This fo fingular Concern which I have shewn for oers, may naturally lead you to ask me, what I feel myself, when I am unfavourably treated by the borate Authors of our daily Papers. Shall I be cere, and own my Frailty? Its usual Effect is to ke me vain! For I confider, if I were quite good nothing, these Pidlers in Wit would not be conn'd to take me to pieces, or (not to be quite so vain) ien they moderately charge me with only Ignorance Dulness, I see nothing in That which an honest an need be asham'd of: There is many a good Soul, io, from those sweet Slumbers of the Brain, are neawaken'd by the least harmful Thought; and I sometimes attempted to think those Retailers of it may be of the same Class; that what they write occeds not from Malice, but Industry; and that I ght no more to reproach them, than I would a Lawthat pleads against me for his Fee; that their Dection, like Dung, thrown upon a Meadow, tho' it y feem at first to deform the Prospect, in a little time it will disappear of itself, and leave an involuntary

Crop of Praise behind it.

When they confine themselves to a sober Criticism upon what I write; if their Censure is just, what Anfwer can I make to it? If it is unjust, why should I suppose that a sensible Reader will not see it, as well as myfelf? Or, admit, I were able to expose them, by a laughing Reply, will not that Reply beget a Rejoinder? And though they might be Gainers, by having the worst on't, in a Paper War, that is no Temptation for me to come into it. Or (to make both fides les confiderable) would not my bearing Ill-language, from a Chimney-sweeper, do me less harm, than it would be to box with him, tho' I were fure to beat him? Nor indeed is the little Reputation I have, as an Author, worth the trouble of a Defence. Then, as no Criticism can possibly make me worse than I really am; fo nothing I fay of myfelf can possibly make me better: When therefore a determin'd Critick comes arm'd with Wit and Outrage, to take from me that fmall Pittance I have, I would no more dispute with him, than I would refift a Gentleman of the Road, to fave a little Pocket money. Men that are in want themselves, seldom make a Conscience of taking it from others. Whoever thinks I have too much, is welcome to what share of it he pleases: Nay, to make him more merciful (as I partly guess the worst he can fay of what I now write) I will prevent even the Imputation of his doing me Injustice, and honestly say it myself, viz. That of all the Assurances I was ever guilty of, this, of writing my own Life, is the most hardy. I beg his Pardon! ——Impudent is what I shou'd have said! That thro' every Page there runs a vein of Vanity and Impertinence, which no French Ensigns memoires ever came up to; but, as this is a common Error, I presume the Terms of doating Triffer, old Fool, or conceited Coxcomb, will carry Contempt enough for an impartial Cenfor to beslow on me; that my Style is unequal, pert, and frothy, patch'd and party colour'd, like the Coat of an Harkquin; low and pompous, cramm'd with Epithets, ftrew'd

tary

iim

An-

dI

well

, by

Oin-

ving

tion

les

rom

m ?

Au-

s no

me

mes

that

with

, to

want

g it

h, 15

make

can

Im-

ever

most -

hat I

ins a

rench

9 15 2

pating

carry

eflow

rothy,

Harle-

thets,

rew'd

strew'd with Scraps of second-hand Latin from common Quotations; frequently aiming at Wit, without ever hitting the Mark; a mere Ragoust, toss'd up from the Offals of other Authors: My Subject below all Pens but my own, which, whenever I keep to, is statly dawb'd by one eternal Egotism: That I want nothing but Wit, to be as an accomplish'd a Coxcomb here, as ever I attempted to expose on the Theatre: Nay, that this very Confession is no more a sign of my Modesty, than it is a Proof of my Judgment; that, in short, you may roundly tell me, that — Cinna (or Cibber) vult videri Pauper, et est Pauper.

When humble Cinna cries, I'm poor and low, You may believe him-he is really fo.

Well, Sir Critick! and what of all this? Now I have laid myself at your Feet, what will you do with ne? Expose me? Why dear Sir, does not every Man hat writes, expose himself? Can you make me more idiculous than Nature has made me? You could not tresuppose, that I would lose the Pleasure of Writing, ecause you might possibly judge me a Blockhead, or ethaps might pleasantly tell other People they ought think me so too. Will not they judge as well from hat I say, as from what You say? If then you attack me merely to divert yourself, your Excuse for fitting will be no better than mine. But perhaps you say want Bread: If that be the Case, even go to sinner, i God's Name!

If our best Authors when teiz'd by these Trissers, we not been Masters of this Indisserence, I should twonder if it were disbelieved in me; but when it considered that I have allowed, my never having been sturbed into a Reply, has proceeded as much from anity as from Philosophy, the Matter then may not em so incredible: And though I consess, the comete Revenge of making them Immortal Dunces in amortal Verse, might be glorious; yet, if you will lit Insensibility in me, never to have winc'd at em, even that Insensibility has its Happiness, and

D 2

what

what could Glory give me more? For my part, I have always had the Comfort to think, whenever they do fign'd me a Disfavour, it generally flew back into their own Faces, as it happens to Children when they found at their Play-fellows against the Wind. If a Scrib ler cannot be easy, because he fancies I have too good an Opinion of my own Productions, let him write on and mortify; I owe him not the Charity to be out of temper myself, merely to keep him quiet, or give him Joy: Nor, in reality, can I fee, why any thing mil represented, tho' believ'd of me by Persons to whom I am unknown, ought to give me any more concen than what may be thought of me in Lapland: 'The with those with whom I am to live only, where m Character can affect me; and I will venture to fan he must find out a new way of Writing that will make me pass my Time there less agreeably.

You see, Sir, how hard it is for a Man that is talk ing of himself, to know when to give over; but i you are tired, lay me aside till you have a fresh Appa tite; if not, I'll tell you a Story.

In the Year 1730, there were many Authors, who Merit wanted nothing but Interest to recommend the to the vacant Laurel, and who took it ill, to fee its last conferr'd upon a Comedian; insomuch, that the were refolv'd, at least, to shew Specimens of their st perior Pretentions, and accordingly enliven'd the pub lick Papers with ingenious Epigrams, and fatyrid Flirts, at the unworthy Successor: These Papers, m Friends, with a wicked Smile, would often put int my Hands, and defire me to read them fairly in Company: This was a Challenge which I never do clin'd, and, to do my doughty Antagonists Justice I always read them with as much impartial Spirit as if I had writ them myfelf. While I was the beset on all sides, there happen'd to step forth a post cal Knight-Errant to my Affistance, who was hard enough to publish some compassionate Stanzas in m Favour. These, you may be sure, the Raillery Friends could do no less than fay, I had written nyself. To deny it, I knew would but have conrm'd their pretended Suspicion : I therefore told hem, fince it gave them fuch Joy to believe them ny own, I would do my best to make the whole Town hink so too. As the Oddness of this Reply was, I new, what would not be eafily comprehended, I efired them to have a Day's Patience, and I would rint an Explanation to it: To conclude, in two Days after I fent this Letter, with fome doggerel thimes at the bottom.

To the Author of the Whitehall Evening-post.

SIR,

have

y de

their (quin

Scrib

good te on out of

e hin g mil-

whom ncen,

: 'T re my

o far

make s talk

but

App

. who

d the ee it a

at the heir w

he pub atyrid

ers, m

ut int

irly #

ever de

Justice Spirit

ras the a poet

as hard

is in m illery (

ritten mylet

THE Verses of the Laureat, in yours of Saturday last, have occasioned the following Reply, phich I hope you'll give a place in your next, to ew that we can be quick, as well as fmart upon proper Occasion: And, as I think it the lowest Mark of Scoundrel to make bold with any Man's Character in rint, without subscribing the true Name of the Author; therefore defire, if the Laureat is concern'd enough, to sk the Question, that you will tell him my Name, and phere I live; till then, I beg leave to be known by no her than that of,

Your Servant,

Monday, Jan. 11, 1730

FRANCIS FAIRPLAY

hele were the Verses, Three it easily make it with tretter agency, we

ATTENDED TO THE MARKET

Ab, bab! Sir Coll, is that thy Way, Thy own dull Praise to write? And wou'd'ft thou fland fo fure a Lay? No, that's rooftele a Bite.

reference during the

Help III belieserig

Nature, and Art, in thee combine,

Thy Talents here excel:

All shining Brass thou dost outshine,

To play the Cheat so well.

my it, I have would be being

III.

Who sees thee in Iago's Part,
But thinks thee such a Rogue?
And is not glad with all his Heart,
To hang so sad a Dog?

IV

When Bays thou play'st, Thyself thou art For that by Nature sit, No Blockhead better suits the Part, Than such a Coxcomb Wit.

washes to the V. d.

In Wronghead too, thy Brains we fee, Who might do well at Plough; As fit for Parliament was be,
As for the Laurel, Thou.

VI.

Bring thy protected Verse from Court, And try it on the Stage; There it will make much better Sport, And set the Town in Rage.

VII.

There Beaux, and Wits, and Cits, and Smarts, Where Hissing's not uncivil, Will show their Parts, to thy Deserts, And send it to the Devil.

VIII.

But, ab! in vain, 'gainst Thee we write,
In vain thy Verse we maul!
Our sharpest Satyr's thy Delight,

* For—Blood! thou'lt stand it all.

I towe myter the chance XI calent

effector in byr cast, like a Lover in the fi-

Thunder, 'tis said, the Laurel spares; Nought but thy Brows could blast it:
And yet——O curst, provoking Stars!
Thy Comfort is, thou hast it.

This, Sir, I offer as a Proof, that I was feven lears ago the same cold Candidate for Fame, which I would still be thought; you will not easily suppose I ould have much Concern about it, while, to gratify he merry Pique of my Friends, I was capable of seeming to head the poetical Cry then against me, and at the me time of never letting the Publick know, 'till this lour, that these Verses were written by myself: Nor o I give them you as an Entertainment, but merely shew you this particular Cast of my Temper.

When I have said this, I would not have it thought ffectation in me, when I grant, that no Man worthy to Name of an Author, is a more faulty Writer than yself; that I am not Master of my own Language, too often feel, when I am at a Loss for Expression: know too that I have too bold a Disregard for that creetness, which others set so just a Value upon: his I ought to be asham'd of, when I find that Perns, of perhaps colder Imaginations, are allow'd to rite better than myself. Whenever I speak of any ing that highly delights me, I find it very difficult to the my Words within the Bounds of common Sense: wen when I write too, the same Failing will somenes get the better of me; of which I cannot give u a stronger Instance, than in that wild Expression I made use of in the first Edition of my Preface to the Provok'd Husband; where, speaking of Mrs. Oldfield's excellent Performance in the Part of Lady Town. ly, my Words ran thus, wix. It is not enough to fay, that here she outdid her usual Outdoing. - A most vile lingle, I grant it! You may well ask me. How could I possibly commit such a wantonness to Paper? And I owe myself the Shame of confessing, I have no Excuse for it, but that, like a Lover in the Fulness of his Content, by endeavouring to be floridly grateful, I talk'd Nonsense. Not but it makes me smile to remember how many flat Writers have made themselves brisk upon this fingle Expression; wherever the Verb Outdo, could come in, the pleasant Accusative, Outdoing, was fure to follow it. The provident Wags knew, that Decies repetita placeret : so delicious a Morfel could not be ferv'd up too often! After it had held them nine times told for a left, the Publick has been peffer'd with a tenth Skull, thick enough to repeat it. Nay, the very learned in the Law, have at last facetiously laid hold of it ! Ten Years after it first came from me, it ferv'd to enliven the Eloquence of an eminent Pleader before a House of Parliament! What Author would not envy me fo frolicksome a Fault, that had such publick Honours paid to it?

* A Line in the Epilogue to the Nonjuror.

After this Confciouness of my real Defects, you will easily judge, Sir, how little I prefume that my poetical Labours may outlive those of my mortal Con-temporanies.

At the fame time that I am so humble in my Pretentions to Fame, I would not be thought to undervalue it; Nature will not suffer us to despise it, but she may sometimes make us too fond of it. I have known more than one good Writer, very near ridiculous, from being in too much Heat about it. Whoever intrinsically deserves it, will always have a proportionable Right to it. It can neither be resigned, not taken from you by Violence. Truth, which is unalterable, must show the Pame may be contested give every man his due: What a Poem weighs, it will be worth;

or is it in the Power of human Eloquence, with Faour or Prejudice, to increase or diminish its Value. Prejudice, 'tis true, may a while discolour it; but it vill always have its Appeal to the Equity of good Sense, which will never fail, in the end, to reverse all false udgment against it. Therefore when I see an eminent Author hurt, and impatient at an impotent Attack upn his Labours, he disturbs my Inclination to admire im; I grow doubtful of the favourable Judgment I ave made of him, and am quite uneafy to fee him b tender, in a Point he cannot but know he ought not imself to be judge of; his Concern indeed, at anoher's Prejudice, or Disapprobation, may be natural; ut, to own it, feems to me a natural Weakness. When Work is apparently great, it will go without Crutchs; all your Art and Anxiety to heighten the Fame of , then becomes low and little. He that will bear no censure, must be often robb'd of his due Praise. Fools ave as good a Right to be Readers, as men of Sense ave, and why not to give their Judgment too? mehinks it would be a Sort of Tyranny in Wit, for an luthor to be publickly putting every Argument to eath that appear'd against him; so absolute a Demand or Approbation, puts us upon our Right to dispute it; raise is as much the Reader's Property, as Wit is the uthor's; Applause is not a Tax paid to him as a rince, but rather a Benevolence given to him as a eggar; and we have naturally more Charity for the umb Beggar, than the sturdy one. The Merit of a Vriter, and a fine Woman's Face, are never mended y their talking of them: How amiable is she that ems not to know she is handsome.

To conclude; all I have faid upon this Subject is such better contained in fix Lines of a Reverend Autor, which will be an Answer to all critical Censure r ever.

the

Old-

FWN-

Jay,

Vile

ould

And

Ex-

f his

ul, I

nem-

brisk

ut do,

, Was

that could nine

With

y, the y laid

ne, it

eader

would pub-

u wil

poeti-

1 Com

reten

rvalue

e may

knows

from

nfical

Right n you

mul

y man yorth; Time is the Judge; Time has nor Friend, nor Foe; False Fame will wither, and the True will grow:

Arm'd with this Truth, all Criticks I defy, For, if I fall, by my own Pen I die.
While Snarlers strive with proud, but fruitless Pais, To wound Immortals, or to flay the Slain.

CHAP. III.

The Author's several Chances for the Church, the Court, and the Army. Going to the University. Met the Revolution at Notingham. Took Arms on that Side. What he saw of it. A few Political Thoughts. Fortune willing to do for him. His Neglett of her. The Stage preferr'd to all her favours. The Profession of an Actor consider'd. The Missortunes and Advantages of it.

Fortune feem'd to be at a Loss what she should do with me. Had she favour'd my Father's first Defignation of me, he might then, perhaps, have had as sanguine hopes of my being a Bishop, as I afterwards conceived of my being a General when I first took Arms, at the Revolution. Nay, after that, I had a third Chance too, equally as good, of becoming an Under-proper of the State. How, at last, I came to be none of all these, the Sequel will inform you.

About the Year 1687, I was taken from School to fland at the Election of Children into Winebester College; my being, by my Mother's Side, a Descendant of William of Wickham, the Founder, my Father, (who knew little how the World was to be dealt with) imagined my having that Advantage, would be Security enough for my Success, and so sent me simply down thither, without the least favourable Recommendation or Interest, but that of my naked Merit, and a pom-

pous

ou

on

Jay

en

nit

ng are

ith

his

ere

e I

He

nta

t-la

an

wu

id ald

fore

hef

pa finc

OW

y I moi

alth

nafi

lop

h A

After

as o

to.

con

P

ugh !

ous Pedigree in my Pocket. Had he tack'd a Direction to my Back, and fent me by the Carrier to the layor of the Town, to be chosen Member of Parliagnt there, I might have had just as much hance to we succeeded in the one, as the other. But I must not not in this place, to let you know, that the Experimental which my Father then bought, at my Cost, and him, some Years after, to take a more judicious are of my younger Brother, Lewis Cibber, whom, it the Present of a Statue of the Founder, of his making, he recommended to the same College, his Statue now stands (I think) over the School Door ere, and was so well executed, that it seem'd to speak—for its Kinsman. It was no sooner set up, than e Door of Preferment was open'd to him.

at ts.

E II

4-fires

hen

do

na-

an-

on-

, at nce

T of

refe,

ol to

Col-

dant

her,

vith)

ecu-

OWI

pompous Here, one wou'd think, my Brother had the Admage of me, in the Favour of Fortune, by this his laudable Step into the World. I own, I was fo bud of his Success, that I even valued myself upon and yet it is but a melancholy Reflection to observe; w unequally his Profession and mine were provided ; when I, who had been the Outcast of Fortune; ald find means, from my Income of the Theatre, ore I was my own Master there, to supply, in his helt Preferment, his common Necessities. I can part with his Memory without telling you, I had fincere a Concern for this Brother's Well-being, as own. He had lively Parts, and more than ordiy Learning, with a good deal of natural Wit and mour; but from too great a Difregard to his alth, he died a Fellow of New College in Oxford, patter he had been ordain'd by Dr. Compton, then pop of London. I now return to the State of my Affair at Winchester.

as one of the unfuccessful Candidates, I bleft my to think what a happy Reprieve I had got, from confin'd Life of a School-boy! and the same Day Post back to London, that I might arrive time igh to see a Play (then my darling Delight) before my Mother might demand an Account of my travelling Charges. When I look back to that time, it almost makes me tremble to think what Miseries, in sity Years farther in Life, such an unthinking Head was liable to! To ask, why Providence afterward took more care of me, than I did of myself, might be making too bold an Enquiry into its secret Will and Pleasure: All I can say to that Point, is, that I am

h

Bi

in 10

he

rai

hi

e

nd

ırı

b v nîtt

im

ide

Bis

is S

e [ om

d t

at

rang

ere :

ou'd

ht;

rtan

fpor

s ju

mit

he

this

Imp Play

e fal

thankful, and amaz'd at it!

'Twas about this time I first imbib'd an Inclination, which I durst not reveal, for the Stage; for, besides that I knew it would disoblige my Father, I had no Conception of any means, practicable, to make my way to it. I therefore suppress'd the bewitching Idea of fo fublime a Station, and compounded with my Ambition by laying a lower Scheme, of only getting the nearest Way into the immediate Life of a Gentle man-Collegiate. My Father being at this time employ'd at Chatsworth in Derbysbire, by the (then Earl of Devonshire, who was raising that Seat from a Gothick, to a Grecian, Magnificence, I made use of the Leisure I then had, in London, to open to him, by Letter, my Difinclination to wait another Year for an uncertain Preferment at Winchester, and to entreat him that he would fend me, per faltum, by a shorter Cut, to the University. My Father, who was naturally indulgent to me, feem'd to comply with my Request, and wrote word, that as soon his Affain would permit, he would carry me with him, and fettle me in some College, but rather at Cambridge where, (during his late Residence at that Place, in making some Statues that now stand upon Trining College New Library) he had contracted fome Ac quaintance with the Heads of Houses, who might a fift his Intentions for me. This I lik'd better than a go discountenanc'd to Oxford, to which it would have been a fort of Reproach to me, not have come elected. After some Months were laps'd, my Father, not being willing to let me la too long idling in London; fent for me down t Chatsworth, to be under his Eye, till he cou'd be

d

be

nd

m

on, des

no

my

eas my

ing

tle-

em-

hen

n a e of

him,

r for treat

orter

natu-Re

ffain

and

ridge

e, in

Ac ht al

nan w

Dectes

at leisure to carry me to Cambridge. Before I could fet out, on my Journey thither, the Nation fell in labour of the Revolution, the News being then just brought to London, That the Prince of Orange, at the Head of an Army was landed in the West. When I came to Nottingham, I found my Father in Arms there, among those Forces which the Earl of Devonbire had raised for the Redress of our violated Laws and Liberties. My Father judged this a proper Seaon, for a young Strippling to turn himself loose into he Buftle of the World , and being himself too adanced in Years, to endure the Winter Fatigue, which hight possibly follow, entreated that noble Lord, that e would be pleas'd to accept of his Son in his room, nd that he would give him (my Father) leave to reurn, and finish his Works at Chattsworth. This was well receiv'd by his Lordship, that he not only adhitted of my Service, but promis'd my Father, in reim, that when Affairs were fettled, he would proide for me. Upon this, my Father return'd to Derbire, while I, not a little transported, jump'd into s Saddle. Thus, in one Day, all my Thoughts of e University were smother'd in Ambition! A slight emmission for a Horse-Officer, was the least View I d before me. At this Crifis you cannot but observe. at the Fate of King James, and of the Prince of range, and that of so minute a Being as my self. ere all at once upon the Anvil: In what shape they pu'd severally come out, tho' a good Guess might be de, was not then demonstrable to the deepest Foreht; but as my Fortune seem'd to be of small Imstance to the Publick, Providence thought fit to spone it, 'till that of those great Rulers of Nations, s justly perfected. Yet, had my Father's Business mitted him to have carried me, one Month sooner would he intended) to the University, who knows but, ot to this time, that purer Fountain might have wash'd re e Imperfections into a Capacity of writing (instead ne li Plays and Annual Cdes) Sermons, and Paftoral Letwn to But whatever Care of the Church might, for i'd b e fallen to my share, as I dare say it ma be now, in

H

PL

N

ar

wi

tio

De

the 158

the

and

that

a Pr by 1

Pow

Princ

two ]

W

Profp

this I

Engliss.

Aratio

down

in one

35 befter Hands, I ought not to repine at my being other.

wife dispos'd of.

You must, now, consider me as one among those desperate Thousands, who, after a Patience forely try'd, took Arms under the Penner of Necessity, the natural Parent of all Human Laws, and Government, I question, if in all the Histories of Empire, there is one Instance of so bloodless a Revolution, as that in England in 1688, wherein Whigs, Tories, Princes, Prelates, Nobles, Clergy, common People, and a standing Army, were unanimous. To have feen all England of one Mind, is to have liv'd at a very particular Juncture. Happy Nation! who are never divided among themselves, but when they have least to complain of! Our greatest Grievance fince that Time, feems to have been, that we cannot all govern; and 'till the Number of good Places are equal to those, who think themselves qualified for them, there must ever be a Cause of Contention among us. While Great Men want great Posts, the Nation will never want real or feeming Patriots; and while great Pols are fill'd with Persons, whose Capacities are but Human, fuch Persons will never be allow'd to be without Errors; not even the Revolution, with all its Advantages, it feems, has been able to furnish us with unexceptionable Statesmen! for, from that time, I don't remember any one Set of Ministers, that have not been heartily rail'd at; a Period long enough, on would think, (if all of them have been as bad as the have been call'd) to make a People despair of ever see ing a good one: But as it is possible that Envy, Prejudice, or Party, may fometimes have a share in what is generally thrown upon 'em, it is not easy for a pri vate Man, to know who is absolutely in the right from what is faid against them, or from what the Friends or Dependants may fay in their Favour: The I can hardly forbear thinking, that they who have been longest rail'd at, must, from that Circumstance thew, in some fort, a Proof of Capacity. to my History.

1-

fe

ly

he

at.

in

es,

nd-

ng-

lar

led

mmê,

and

ofe,

nuf

hile

ofs

Hu-

out

ran-

nex-

on't

not

OTE

fee-

Pre

what

pri ight

Tho

have

and B It were almost incredible to tell you, at the latter end of King James's Time (tho' the Rod of Arbitrary Power was always shaking over us) with what Freedom and Contempt the common People, in the open Streets, talk'd of his wild Measures to make a whole Protestant Nation Papists; and yet, in the height of our secure and wanton Desiance of him, we, of the Vulgar, had no farther Notion of any Remedy for this Evil, than a satisfy'd Presumption, that our Numbers were too great to be master'd by his mere Will and Pleasure; that though he might be too hard for our Laws, he would never be able to get the better of our Nature; and, that to drive all England into Popery and Slavery, he would find, would be teaching an old Lion to dance.

But, happy was it for the Nation, that it had then wifer Heads in it, who knew how to lead a People fo dispos'd, into Measures for the Publick Preserva-

Here I cannot help reflecting on the very different Deliverances England met with, at this Time, and in the very same Year of the Century before: Then (in 1588) under a glorious Princess, who had, at Heart, the Good and Happiness of her People, we scatter'd and destroy'd the most formidable Navy of Invaders, that ever cover'd the Seas: And now (in 688) under a Prince, who had alienated the Hearts of his People, by his absolute Measures, to oppress them, a foreign. Power is received with open Arms, in desence of our Laws, Liberties, and Religion, which our native Prince had invaded! How widely different were these two Monarchs in their Sentiments of Glory! But Tantum religio potuit suadere malorum.

When we consider, in what height of the Nation's Prosperity, the Successor of Queen Elizabeth came to this Throne, it seems amazing, that such a Pile of English Fame, and Glory, which her skilful Administration had erected, should, in every following Reign, down to the Revolution, so unhappily moulder away, in one continual Gradation of Political Errors: All which must have been avoided, if the plain Rule,

which

o

ha

ig til

wh

ev

he

ve

of Ac

ve her

he

eari

por

erf

vith

ery

hat

lofe

his .

art

nany

vith

omn

rift

rote

Alarn

er as

dyan he Pi

Churci

which that wife Princess left behind her, had been ob. ferved, viz. That the Love of her People was the furth Support of ber Throne. This was the Principle by which she so happily govern'd herself, and those she had the Care of. In this she found Strength to combat, and struggle through more Difficulties, and dangerous Conspiracies, than ever English Monarch had to cope with. At the same time that she profes'd to defire the People's Love, she took care that her Actions should deferve it, without the least Abatement of her Prerogative; the Terror of which she so artfully cover'd, that she sometimes seemed to flatter those she was determin'd shou'd obey. If the four following Princes had exercis'd their Regal Authority with 6 visible a Regard to the publick Welfare, it were hand to know, whether the People of England might have ever complain'd of them, or even felt the want of that Liberty they now so happily enjoy. 'Tis true, that before her Time, our Ancestors had many successful Contests with their Sovereigns for their ancient Right and Glaim to it; yet what did those Successes amount to? little more than a Declaration, that there was fuch a Right in Being; but who ever faw it enjoy'd! Did not the Actions of almost every succeeding Reign Thew, there were still so many Doors of Oppression lest open to the Prerogative, that (whatever Value our most eloquent Legislators may have set upon those ancient Liberties) I doubt it will be difficult to fix the Period of their having a real Being, before the Revolution: Or if there ever was an elder Period of our unmolested enjoying them, I own, my poor Judgment is at a Loss where to place it. I will boldly by then, it is, to the Revolution only, we owe the full Possession of what 'till then, we never had more than a perpetual contested Right to: And, from thence, from the Revolution it is, that the Protestant Succesfors of King William have found their paternal Cart and Maintenance of that Right, has been the furth Basis of their Glory. These, to robulered bouleres which might have been give but, in the panel had

06-reft

by

the

man-

12d

to

Ai-

of

illy

fhe

ing

6

and

ave

hat

hat

sful

ght

unt

was d?

left

TUO

an-

the

VO-

our dg-

full

ma

nce,

cef-

are

ref

efe,

These, Sir, are a sew of my political Notions, which I have ventured to expose, that you may see what fort of an English Subject I am; how wise, or weak they may have shewn me, is not my Concern; let the weight of these Matters have drawn me never so far out of my Depth, I still slatter my self, that I have kept a simple, honest Head above Water. And it is a solid Comfort to me, to consider that how insignificant soever my Life was at the Revolution, it had still the good Fortune to make one, among the many, who brought it about; and that I, now, with my Coevals, as well as with the Millions, since born, enjoy the happy Effects of it.

But I must now let you see how my particular Fortune went forward, with this Change in the Government; of which I shall not pretend to give you any farther Account than what my simple Eyes faw of it.

We had not been many Days at Nattingham before we heard, that the Prince of Denmark, with some oher great Persons, were gone off, from the King, to he Prince of Orange, and that the Princels Anne. earing the King her Father's Resentment might fall pon her, for her Confort's Revolt, had withdrawn erfelf, in the Night, from London, and was then within half a Day's Journey of Nottingham; on which ery Morning we were fuddenly alarm'd with the News. hat two thousand of the King's Dragoons were in lose pursuit to bring her back Prisoner to London: But his Alarm it feems was all Stratagem, and was but a art of that general Terror which was thrown into nany other Places about the Kingdom, at the fame time, with Defign to animate and unite the People in their ommon Defence; it being then given out, that the rish were every where at our Heels, to cut off all the rotestants within the Reach of their Fury. In this Alarm our Troops scrambled to Arms in as much Orer as their Consternation would admit of, when having dvanc'd some few Miles on the London Road, they met he Princess in a Coach, attended only by the Lady burchill (now Dutchess Dowager of Malborough)

2

q

C

21

E ha

fo

0

T

be

Na

T

mi

fon the

Ha

n f

Wes

of w nis'

Nati

ord, irst 7

ible ve re

ligh

ion b

I hro

and the Lady Fitzbarding, whom they conducted into Nottingham, through the Acclamations of the People; The fame Night all the Noblemen, and the other Perfons of Distinction, then in Arms, had the Honous to sup at her Royal Highnesses's Table; which was then furnish'd (as all her necessary Accommodations were) by the Care, and at the Charge of the Lord Devonsbire. At this Entertainment, of which I was a Spectator, fomething very particular furpriz'd me: The noble Guests at the Table happening to be mon In number, than Attendants out of Liveries, could be found, for I being well known in the Lord Devonthire's Family, was defir'd by his Lordship's Maitne "Hotel to affift at it: The Post affign'd me was to obferve what the Lady Churchill might call for. Being fo near the Table, you may naturally ask me, what I might have heard to have pass'd in conversation at it! which I should certainly tell you, had I attended to above two Words that were utter'd there, and those were, Some Wine and Water. These, I remember, came distinguish'd, and observ'd to my Ear, because they came from the fair Guest, whom I took such pleafure to wait on : Except at that fingle Sound, all my Senles were collected into my Eyes, which during the whole Entertainment wanted no better Amusement, than of stealing now and then the delight of gazing on the fair Object fo near me: If so clear an Emanation of Beauty, fuch a commanding Grace of Afpect struck me into Regard that had fomething fofter than the most profound Respect in it, I cannot see why I may not, with out offence, remember it; fince Beauty, like the Sun must sometimes lose its power to chuse, and shine into qual warmth, the Peafant and the Courtier. Now to give you, Sir, a farther proof of how good a Tafte my fir hopeful entrance into Manhood fet out with, I remem ber above twenty Years after, when the same Lady had hat co given the World four of the lovelieft Daughters, that nd Pi ever were gaz'd on, even after they were all nobl ublic married, and were become the reigning Toasts of ever vere r Party of Pleasure, their still lovely Mother had Officer ifing, 3 t<sub>q</sub>

u

25 ns

rd

121

e:

ore

be

onitre

ob-

ing

hat

it?

hole

bet,

aufe

olea-

enfa

hole

n of fair

auty,

pro-

Sun,

nto e

y fin

mem ly had

, that

nobl

ever

th

the fame time her Votaries, and her Health very often took the Lead, in those involuntary Triumphs of Beauty. However prefumptuous, or impertinent thefe Thoughts might have appear'd at my first entertaining them, why may I not hope that my having kept them decently fecret, for full fifty Years, may be now a good round Plea for their Pardon? Were I now qualify'd to fay more of this celebrated Lady, I should conclude it thus: That she has liv'd (to all Appearance) a peculiar Favourite of Providence; that few Examples can parallel the Profusion of Bleffings which have attended so long a Life of Felicity. A Person so attractive! a Husband so memorably great! an Offspring so beautiful! a Fortune so immense! and a Title, which (when Royal Favour had no higher to bestow) she only cou'd receive from the Author of Nature; a great Grandmother without grey Hairs? These are such consummate Indulgencies, that we might think Heaven has center'd them all in one Person, to let us see how far, with a lively Understanding, the full Possession of them could contribute to human Happiness—I now return to our military Affairs.

From Nottingham, our Troops march'd to Oxford; brough every Town we pass'd, the People came out. in some fort of Order, with such rural, and rusty Weapons as they had, to meet us in Acclamations of welcome, and good wishes. This, I thought, pro-nis'd a favourable End of our civil War, when the Nation feem'd fo willing to be all of a Side! At Oxord, the Prince and Princess of Denmark met, for the rif Time, after their late Separation, and had all posble Honours paid them by the University. Here ve rested in quiet Quarters for several Weeks, till the light of King James into France; when the Naion being left to take care of it felf, the only Security hat could be found for it, was to advance the Prince nd Princess of Orange to the vacant Throne. The ublick Tranquility being now fettled; our Forces vere remanded back to Nottingham. Here all our officers, who had commanded them from their first ising, receiv'd Commissions to confirm them in their feveral Posts; and at the same time, such private Men as chose to return to their proper Business or Habitations, were offer'd their Discharges. Among the small number of those, who receiv'd them, I was one; for not hearing that my Name was in any of these new Commissions, I thought it time for me to take my leave of Ambition, as Ambition had before seduc'd me from the imaginary Honours of the Gown, and therefore resolv'd to hunt my Fortune in some of ther Field.

From Nottingham, I again return'd to my Father at Chattsworth, where I staid till my Lord came down, with the new Honours of Duke of Devenfbire, Lord Steward of his Majesty's Houshold, and Knight of the Garter! a noble Turn of Fortune! and a deep Stake he had play'd for! which calls to my Memory, a flory we had then in the Family, which though too light for our graver Historians Notice, may be of weight enough for my humble Memoin. This noble Lord being in the Presence-chamber, in King James's Time, and known to be no Friend to the Measures of his Administration; a certain Person in favour there, and defirous to be more fo, took ocafion to tread rudely upon his Lordship's Foot, which was returned with a fudden Blow upon the Spot: For this Misdemeanour his Lordship was fin'd thirty thou fand Pounds; but I think had some time allow him for the Payment. In the Summer preceding the Revolution, when his Lordship was retir'd to Chattfworth, and had been there deeply engag'd with other Noblemen, in the Measures, which soon after brought it to bear, King James fent a Person down him, with Offers to mitigate his Fine, upon Conde tions of ready Payment, to which his Lordship reply that if his Majesty pleas'd to allow him a little longer time, he would rather chuse to play double or que with him: The Time of the intended Rifing being then so near at hand, the Demand, it seems, can too late for a more ferious Answer.

ha

in

he

èp

llo

gh

at ( te :

the

one

mp

'n'd

as'c

lig'

ack

II fo

lly ;

dab

it :

n of

ring

rusb

Vac

lever

ient a

10 aş of

to

re

n,

0-ner

0#-

ind

and

Ae-

ich ice,

irs.

1. F. E.

cca-

aich

For

hou-

ding

d to

With

after vn to

ondi

oly'd

ongu

being cam

How

However low my Pretenfions to Preferment were t this Time, my Father thought that a little Court ayour added to them, might give him a Chance for ving the Expence of maintaining me, as he had inended at the University : He therefore order'd me draw up a Petition to the Duke, and to give it me Air of Merit, to put it into Latin, the Prayer which was, that his Grace would be pleas'd to do mething ( I really forget what) for me-How+ ver the Duke upon receiving it, was so good as to fire my Father would fend me to London in the Vinter, where he would confider of some Provision me. It might, indeed, well require time to con-Her it; for I believe it was then harder to know hat I was really fit for, than to have got me any ing I was not fit for : However, to London I came, here I enter'd into my first State of Attendance and ependance for about five Months, till the February flowing. But alas! in my Intervals of Leisure, by equently feeing Plays, my wife Head was turn'd to ther Views, I faw no Joy in any other Life than at of an Actor, so that (as before, when a Candite at Winchester) I was even afraid of succeeding the Preferment I fought for: 'Fwas on the Stage one I had form'd a Happiness preferable to all that mps or Courts could offer me, and there was I deterh'd, let Father and Mother take it as they as'd, to fix my non ultra. Here I think myfels lig'd, in respect to the Honour of that noble Lord, acknowledge, that I believe his real Intentions to do Il for me, were prevented by my own inconfiderate lly; so that if my Life did not then take a more dable Turn, I have no one but myself to reproach it: for I was credibly inform'd by the Gentlen of his Houshold, that his Grace had, in their ring, talk'd of recommending me to the Lord rwsbury, then Secretary of State, for the first pro-Vacancy in that Office. But the distant Hope of leversion was too cold a Temptation for a Spirit imient as mine, that wanted immediate Possession of at my Heart was so differently set upon. The Al-Jan of tol stimil on the stay lurements lurements of a Theatre are still so strong in my Me mory, that perhaps sew, except those who have set them, can conceive: And I am yet so far willing to excuse my Folly, that I am convinc'd, were it possible to take off that Disgrace and Prejudice, which Custom has thrown upon the Profession of an Actor, many a well-born younger Brother, and Beauty of low Fortune would gladly have adorn'd the Theatre, who by their not being able to brook such Dishonour to the Birth, have pass'd away their Lives decently unheed

2

ol

1

h

0

at

ma

b til

icl

th

tir

me

n'i

ge

W

dier

ple

upt

he he and forgotten. he relation bulgar

Many Years ago, when I was first in the manage ment of the Theatre, I remember a ftrong Instance which will shew you what degree of Ignominy the Pro fession of an Actor was then held at-A Lady, with a real Title, whose female Indiscretions had occasion her Family to abandon her, being willing, in herd ftress to make an honest Penny of what Beauty she h left, defir'd to be admitted as an Actres; when bei fhe could receive our Answer, a Gentleman (probab by her Relation's Permission) advis'd us not to enter tain her, for Reasons easy to be guess'd. You ma imagine we could not be so blind to our Interest at make an honourable Family our unnecessary Enemis by not taking his Advice which the Lady too h ing fenfible of, faw the Affair had its Difficultie and therefore pursu'd it no farther. Now is it a hard that it should be a doubt, whether this Lady Condition or ours were the more melancholy? here, you find her honest Endeavour, to get Bread for the Stage, was look'd upon as an Addition of me Scandal to her former Dishonour ! so that I am afra according to this way of thinking, had the same La stoop'd to have fold Patches and Pomatum, in a Ban box, from Door to Door, the might, in that Occup tion have flarv'd, with less Infamy, than had she liev'd her Necessities by being famous on the Theat Whether this Prejudice may have arisen from the Aba that to often have crept in upon the Stage, I am! clear in; tho when that is grofly the Cafe, I will low there ought to be no Limits fet to the Contem f it; yet in its lowest Condition, in my time, mehinks there could have been no great Pretence of prering the Band-box to the Bulkin. But this fevere Oinion, whether merited, or not, is not the greatest Diress that this Profession is liable to.

Me

fel

ex-

fible

ton

am

For-

ther

ede

nage

ance

Pro

wit

fion

er d ie h

befr bah

enter

u ma

t as t

emid

00 b

ultic it m

? Fo

d fro of ne

La

Ban

Occup

the ! heat

e Abu

am n will

ontem

I shall now give you another Anecdote, quite the everse of what I have instanc'd, wherein you will e an Actress, as hardly us'd for an Act of Modesty which without being a Prude, a Woman, even upon e Stage, may fometimes think it necessary not to row off.) This too I am forc'd to premile, that e Truth of what I am going to tell you, may not fneer'd at before it be known. About the Year 17, a young Actress, of a defirable Person, fitting an upper Box at the Opera, a military Gentleman ought this a proper Opportunity to secure a little inversation with her; the Particulars of which were, obably, no more worth repeating, than it feems Damoiselle then thought them worth listening to; , notwithstanding the fine Things he said to her, rather chose to give the Musick the Preserence of Attention: This Indifference was so offensive to high Heart, that he began to change the Tender, othe Terrible, and, in short, proceeded at last to at her in a Style too grosly insulting, for the meanest male Ear to endure unrefented: Upon which, bebeaten too far out of her Discretion, she turn'd tily upon him, with an angry Look, and a Reply, ich seem'd to set his Merit in so low a Regard, the thought himself oblig'd, in Honour, to take time to refent it: This was the full Extent of her me, which his Glory delay'd no longer to punish, n'till the next time she was to appear upon the ge: There in one of her best Parts, wherein she w a favourable Regard and Approbation from the dience, he, dispensing with the Respect which some ple think due to a polite Affembly, began to inupt her Performance, with fuch loud and various es of Mockery, as other young Men of Honour, he same Place, have sometimes made themselves undaunundauntedly merry with: Thus, deaf to all Murmun or Entreaties of those about him, he pursued his Point, even to throwing near her such Trash, as no Person can be supposed to carry about him, unless to use

In

r

qi ri

Ca

uff

he ro

ho

ng

nti

he

ow

dif

ion

his

vorf

W

re fi

f Se

bund

ien i

of

itors

nere

bald

ostitu

loral

owm

on so particular an Occasion.

A Gentleman, then behind the Scenes, being shock'd at his unmanly Behaviour, was warm enough to fay, That no Man, but a Fool, or a Bully, cou'd be capable of infulting an Audience, or a Woman in fo monstrous a Manner. The former valiant Gentleman, to whose Ear the Words were soon brought, by his Spies, whom he had plac'd behind the Scenes, to observe how the Action was taken there, came immediately from the Pit, in a Heat, and demanded to know of the Author of those Words, if he was the Person that spoke them? to which he calmly reply'd, That though he had never feen him before, yet, fince he feem'd so earnest to be satisfy'd, he would do him the favour to own, That, indeed, the Words were his, and that they would be the last Words he should chuse to deny, whoever they might fall upon. To conclude, their Dispute was ended the next Morning in Hyde-Park, where the determin'd Combatant, who first ask'd for Satisfaction, was oblig'd afterwards to ask his Life too; whether he mended it or not, I have not yet heard; but his Antagonist, in a few Years after, died in one of the principal Posts of the Government.

Now though I have, sometimes, known these gallant Insulters of Audiences, draw themselves into Scrapes, which they have less honourably got out of; yet, alas! what has that avail'd? This generous publick-spirited Method of silencing a few, was but repelling the Disease, in one Part, to make it break out in another: All Endeavours at Protection are new Provocations, to those who pride themselves in pushing their Courage to a Desiance of Humanity. Even when a Royal Resentment has shewn itself, in the behalf of an injur'd Actor, it has been unable to defend him from farther Insults! an Instance of which happen'd

13

18

00

10

ng

6-

ly,

0-ant

100

the

re,

de-

if. he nim

y'd,

laft

ght

the

in'd

S 0-

he

An-

rin-

gal-

into

of;

rous

but

reak

are

es in nity.

n the

efend

pen'd

10

n the late King James's Time. Mr. Smith (whole Character as a Gentleman, could have been no way mpeach'd, had he not degraded it, by being a celebrated Actor) had the Misfortune, in a Dispute with Gentleman behind the Scenes, to receive a Blow from him: The fame Night an account of this Action was arry'd to the King, to whom the Gentleman was represented so grosly in the wrong, that, the next Day, his Majesty fent to forbid him the Court upon it. This indignity cast upon a Gentleman, only for having ma!reated a Player, was look'd upon as the Concern of very Gentleman; and a Party was foon form'd to afert, and vindicate their Honour, by humbling this avour'd Actor, whose slight Injury had been judg'd qual to fo fevere a Notice. Accordingly, the next Time Smith acted, he was received with a Chorus of Cat-calls, that foon convinc'd him, he should not be uffer'd to proceed in his Part; upon which, without he least Discomposure, he order'd the Curtain to be ropp'd; and, having a competent Fortune of his own. hought the Conditions of adding to it, by his remainng upon the Stage, were too dear, and from that Day ntirely quitted it. I shall make no Observation upon he King's Resentment, or that of his good Subjects: ow far either was, or was not right, is not the point dispute for: Be that as it may, the unhappy Condion of the Actor was to far from being reliev'd by his Royal Interpolition in his favour, that it was the vorie for it.

While these sort of real Distresses, on the Stage, re so unavoidable, it is no wonder that young People Sense (though of low Fortune) should be so rarely ound, to supply a Succession of good Actors. Why hen may we not, in some Measure, impute the Scarci of them, to the wanton Inhumanity of those Spectors, who have made it so terribly mean to appear here? Were there no ground for this Question, where ould be the Disgrace of entring into a Society, whose salitution, when not abus'd, is a delightful School of sorality; and where to excel, requires as ample Enowements of Nature, as any one Profession (that of holy Institution excepted) whatsoever? But, alas! as Shakespear says, Where's that Palace, whereinto, fometimes Foul things intrude not?

Look into St. Peter's at Rome, and see what a profitable Farce is made of Religion there! Why then is an Actor more blemish'd than a Cardinal? While the Excellence of the one arises from his innocently seeming what he is not, and the Eminence of the other, from the most impious Fallacies that can be impos'd upon human Understanding? If the best Things, therefore, are most liable to Corruption, the Corruption of the Theatre is no Disproof of its innate and primitive U-

În

υ

kı

a V.j

n

h

n vi

ge

nt

t

eti

t, he

tility.

In this Light, therefore, all the Abuses of the Stage, all the low, loofe, or immoral Supplements, to wit, whether, in making Virtue ridiculous, or Vice agreeable, or in the decorated Nonfense and Absurdities of pantomimical Trumpery, I give up to the Contempt of every fensible Spectator, as so much rank Theatrical Popery. But cannot still allow these Enormities to impeach the profession, while they are so palpably owing to the deprav'd Tafte of the Multitude. While Vice, and Farcical Folly, are the most profitable Commodities, why should we wonder that, time out of mind, the poor Comedian, when real Wit would bear no price, should deal in what would bring him most ready Money? But this, you will fay, is making the Stage a Nursery of Vice and Folly, or at least keeping an open Shop for it.- I grant it : But who do you expect should reform it? The Actors? Why so? If People are permitted to buy it, without blushing, the Theatrical Merchant feems to have an equal Right to the Liberty of felling it, without Reproach. That this Evil wants a Remedy, is not to be contested; not can it be denied, that the Theatre is as capable of being preferv'd, by a Reformation, as Matters of more Importance; which, for the Honour of our national Tafte, I could wish were attempted; and then, if it could

26

n B

the ing

rom

pon ore,

the

U-

age,

Wit,

rees of

mpt

atries to

OW-

Thile

com-

it of

bear

mof

the

ping

u ex-

1 H

, the

ht to

That

nor of bemore ional

, if it

could

could not subfift, under decent Regulations, by not beng permitted to present any thing there, but what were worthy to be there, it would be time enough to confider, whether it were necessary to let it totally fall, or ffectually support it.

Notwithstanding all my best Endeavours, to recommend the Profession of an Actor, to a more general Favour, I doubt, while it is liable to fuch Corruptions, and the Actor himself to such unlimited Insults, as I have already mentioned, I doubt, I fay, we must still eave him a-drift, with his intrinfick Merit, to ride but the Storm as well as he is able.

However, let us now turn to the other Side of this ccount, and fee what Advantages stand there, to haance the Misfortunes I have laid before you. There we shall still find some valuable Articles of Credit, that ometimes overpay his incidental Difgraces.

First, if he has Sense, he will consider, that as these Indignities are feldom or never offer'd him by People hat are remarkable for any one good Quality, he ught not to lay them too close to his Heart: He will now too, that when Malice, Envy, or a brutal Nature, an securely hide or sence themselves in a Multitude, Virtue, Merit, Innocence, and even fovereign Superirity, have been, and must be equally liable to their mults; that therefore, when they fall upon him in he same Manner, his intrinsick Value cannot be dimihih'd by them: On the contrary, if, with a decent nd unruffled Temper, he lets them pass, the Disgrace vill return upon his Aggreffor, and perhaps warm the generous Spectator into a Partiality in his Favour.

That while he is confcious, that as an Actor, he built be always in the Hands of Injustice, it does him t least this involuntary Good, that it keeps him in a ettled Resolution to avoid all Occasions of provoking , or of even offending the lowest Enemy, who, at he Expence of a Shilling, may publickly revenge That, if he excels on the Stage, and is irreproachable in his personal Morals, and Behaviour, his prosession is so far from being an impediment, that it will be oftner a just Reason for his being receiv'd among People of condition with Favour; and sometimes with a more social Distinction, than the best, though more prostable Trade he might have follow'd, could have recommended him to.

That this is a Happiness to which several Actor. within my Memory, as Betterton, Smith, Montfort, Captain Griffin, and Mrs. Bracegirdle (yet living) have arrived at; to which I may add the late celebrated Mrs. Oldfield. Now let us suppose these Persons, the Men, for Example, to have been all eminent Mercers, and the Women as famous Milliners, can we imagine, that merely as such, though endow'd with the fame natural Understanding, they could have been call'd into the same honourable Parties of Conversation? People of Sense and Condition, could not but know, it was impossible they could have had fuch various Excellencies on the Stage, without having fome thing naturally valuable in them: And I will takeup on me to affirm, who knew them all living, that there was not one of the Number, who were not capable of supporting a Variety of spirited Conversation, the the Stage were never to have been the Subject of it.

That, to have trod the Stage, has not always been thought a Disqualification from more honourable Employments; several have had military Commissions; Carlisse and Wiltshire were both kill'd Captains; one, in King William's Reduction of Ireland; and the other, in his first War, in Flanders; and the samous Ba Johnson, tho' an unsuccessful Actor, was afterward

m 10

ma

ut

A

ti

10

a

0

Ad

an

er

made Poet-Laureat.

To these laudable Distinctions, let me add one more; that if publick Applause, which, when truly merited, is, perhaps, one of the most agreeable Gratifications that venial Vanity can feel. A happiness, almost peculiar to the Actor, insomuch that the best Tragick Writer, however numerous his separate Admirers may be, yet, to unite them into one general Act of Praise, to receive at once, those thundering Peals of Approbation, which a crowded Theatre throws out, he must still call in the Assistance of the skilful Actor, to raise and partake of them.

ch-

be

ple

ore

ita-

om-

ors,

fort,

ing

bra-

ons, Aerwe

with been fati-

but vaome-

e up-

there

' the

been

Em-

ions;

one,

other,

Ba

wards

more;

rited,

ations

oft pe-

agick

s may

Praise,

In a Word, 'twas in this flattering Light only, though not perhaps so thoroughly consider'd, I look'd upon the Life of an Actor, when but eighteen Years of Age; nor can you wonder, if the Temptations were too strong for so warm a Vanity as mine to resist; but whether excusable, or not, to the Stage, at length I came, and it is from thence, chiefly, your Curiosity, if you have any lest, is to expect a farther account of me.

CHAP. IV.

A short View of the Stage, from the Year 1660 to the Revolution. The King's and Duke's Company united, composed the best Set of English Actors yet known. Their several Theatrical Characters.

THO' I have only promis'd you an account of all the material Occurrences of the Theatre during my own Time; yet there was one which happen'd not above seven Years before my Admission to it, which may be as well worth Notice, as the first great Revoution of it, in which, among Numbers, I was involv'd. And as the one will lead you into a clearer View of the other, it may therefore be previously necessary to let ou know that,

King Charles II, at his Restoration, granted two Patents, one to Sir William Davenant, and the other other Killigrew, Esq; and their several Heirs and Assigns, for ever, for the forming of two distinct Comanies of Comedians: The first were call'd the King's ervants, and acted at the Theatre-Royal in Drury-

F.

Lane ; .

Lane; and the other the Duke's Company, who afted at the Duke's Theatre in Dorfet-Garden. About ten of the King's Company were on the Royal Houshold-Establishment, having each ten Yards of Scarlet Cloth, with a proper Quantity of Lace allow'd them for Liveries; and in their Warrants from the Lord Chamberlain, were stiled Gentlemen of the Great Chamber: Whether the like Appointments were extended to the Duke's Company, I am not certain; but they were both in high Estimation with the Publick, and so much the Delight and Concern of the Court, that they were not only supported by its being frequently present at their publick Presentations, but by its taking cognizance even of their private Government, infomuch, that their particular Differences, Pretentions, or Complaints, were generally ended by the King, or Duki's personal Command or Decision. Besides their being thorough Masters of their Art, these Actors set forwards with two critical Advantages, which perhaps may never happen again in many Ages. The one was their immediate opening for fo long Interdiction of Plays, during the Civil War, and the Anarchy that follow'd it. What eager Appetites from fo long a Fast, must the Guests of those Times have had, to that high and fresh Variety of Entertainments, which Shakestear had left prepar'd for them? Never was a Stage fo provided! A hundred Years are wasted, and another filent Century well advanced, and yet what unborn Age shall fay, Shakespear has his Equal! How many shining Actors have the warm Scenes of his Genius given to Posterity? without being himself, in his action, equal to his Writing! a strong Proof that Actors, like Poets, must be born such. Eloquence and Elocution are quite different Talents : Shakespear cou'd write Hamlet; but Tradition tells us, That the Ghoff, in the fame Play, was one of his best Performance as an Actor: Nor is it within the Reach of Rule or Precept to complete either of them. Instruction, 'tis true, may guard them equally against Faults or Absurdities, but there it ftops; Nature must do the rest: To ex-

p

Co

PI

ot

ro h ie ir ted

ten old-

oth.

Li-

am-

ber:

the

were nuch

were

t at gni-

uch,

com-

uke's

eing

for-

may

Was

on of

that ng a

that which was a

, and what

How

is Ge-

in his t Ace and cou'd

Ghoft, nance

ule or n, 'tis Abfur-

To ex-

cel

cel in either Art, is a self-born Happiness, which fomething more than good Sense must be the Mother

The other Advantage I was speaking of, is, that before the Restoration, no Actresses had ever been seen upon the English Stage. The Characters of Women. on former Theatres, were perform'd by Boys, or young Men of the most effeminate Aspect. And what Grace, or Master-strokes of Action can we conreive fuch ungain Hoydens to have been capable of? This Defect was fo well consider'd by Shakespear. hat in few of his Plays, he has any greater Depenfance upon the Ladies, than in the Innocence and Simplicity of a Desdemona, an Ophelia, or in the short specimen of a fond and virtuous Portia. The addifional Objects then of a real, beautiful Woman, fould not but draw a proportion of new Admirers to he Theatre. We may imagine too, that these Acreffes were not ill chosen, when it is well known, that nore than one of them had Charms fufficient at their eisure Hours, to calm and mollify the Cares of Emire. Besides these peculiar Advantages, they had a rivate Rule or Agreement, which both Houses were appily ty'd down to, which was, that no Play acted t one House, should ever be attempted at the other. All the capital Plays therefore of Shakespear, Fletber, and Ben. Johnson, were divided between them. y the Approbation of the Court, and their own a'emate Choice: So that when Hart was famous for Othello, Betterton had no less a Reputation for Hamlet. y this Order the Stage was supply'd with a greater Variety of Plays than could possibly have been shewn, ad both Companies been employed at the same Time, pon the same Play; which Liberty too, must have ccasion'd such frequent Repetitions of 'em, by their pposite Endeavours to forestal and anticipate one aother, that the best Actors in the World must have rown tedious and tafteless to the Spectator: For hat Pleasure is not languid to Satiety? It was erefore one of our greatest Happinesses (during my ime of being in the Management of the Stage) that we had a certain Number of select Plays, which no other Company had the good Fortune to make a tolerable Figure in, and consequently, could find little or no Account, by acting them against us. These Plays therefore, for many Years, by not being too often seen, never fail'd to bring us crowded Audiences; and it was to this Conduct we ow'd no little share of our Prosperity. But when our Houses are at once (as very lately they were) all permitted to act the same Pieces, let three of them perform never so ill, when Plays come to be so harrass'd and hackney'd out to common People (half of which too, perhaps would as lieve see them at one House as another) the best Actors will soon feel that the Town has enough of them.

I know it is the common Opinion, That the more Play-houses, the more Emulation; I grant it; but what has this Emulation ended in? Why, a daily Contention which shall soonest surfeit you with the best Plays; fo that when what ought to please, can no longer please, your Appetite is again to be rais'd by fuch monstrous Presentations, as dishonour the Taste of a civiliz'd People. If, indeed, to our several Theatres, we could raise a proportionable Number of good Authors, to give them all different Employment, then, perhaps, the Publick might profit from their Fmulation: But while good Writers are fo fcarce, and undaunted Criticks so plenty, I am afraid a good Play, and a blazing Star, will be equal Rarities. This voluptuous Expedient, therefore, of indulging the Tafte with several Theatres, will amount to much the fame Variety as that of a certain Oeconomist, who to enlarge his Hospitality would have two Puddings and two Legs of Mutton, for the same Dinner. -But, to resume the Thread of my History.

ro

ti

h

lle

th

er

These two excellent Companies were both prosperous for some sew Years, 'till their Variety of Plays began to be exhausted: Then of Course, the better Actors (which the King's seem to have been allow'd could not fail of drawing the greater Audiences

DO

to-

ittle

hefe

too

udi-

ittle

d to

and

to0,

anon has more what

nten-

beft

n no

'd by

Tafte

everal

per of

aploy-

from

carce,

a good

g the

ch the

who

ddings

prospe

Plays better

llow'd

liences

This

ir William Davenant, therefore, Master of the Duke's company, to make Head against their Success, was pre'd to add Spectacle and Musick to Action; and to attroduce a new Species of Plays, since call'd Dramack Opera's, of which Kind were the Tempest, Psyche, irce, and others, all set off with the most expensive pecorations of Scenes and Habits, with the best Voices and Dancers.

This sensual Supply of Sight and Sound, coming in the Assistance of the weaker Party, it was no Woner they should grow too hard for Sense and simble Nature, when it is consider'd how many more Peole there are, that can see and hear, than think and dge. So wanton a Change of the publick Taste, perefore, began to fall as heavy upon the King's company, as their greater Excellence in Action, had, afore, fallen upon their Competitors: Of which Encoachment upon Wit, several good Prologues in those ays frequently complain'd.

But alas! what can Truth avail, when its Depennce is much more upon the Ignorant, than the fenble Auditor? A poor Satisfaction, that the due Praise ven to it, must at last, fink into the cold Comfort -Laudatur & Alget. Unprofitable praise n hardly give it a Soup maigre. Taste and Fashiwith us, have always had Wings, and fly from e publick Spectacle to another fo wantonly, that I we been inform'd by those, who remember it, that famous Puppet-shew in Salisbury Change, (then nding where Cecil-fireet now is) so far distrest these to celebrated Companies, that they are reduc'd to tition the King for Relief against it: Nor ought perhaps to think this strange, when, if I mistake t, Terence himself reproaches the Roman Auditors his Time, with the like Fondness for the Funami, the Rope-dancers. Not to dwell too long theree upon that part of my History, which I have only lected, from oral Tradition, I shall content myself th telling you, that Mobun, and Hart now growing (for, above thirty Years before this Time, they had erally born the King's Commission of Major and Captain, in the Civil Wars) and the younger Actors, as Goodman, Clark, and others, being impatient to get into their Parts, and growing intractable, the Audiences too of both Houses then falling off, the Patentees of each, by the King's Advice, which perhaps amounted to a Command, united their Interests, and both Companies into one, exclusive of all others, in the Year 1684. This Union was, however, so much in favour of the Duke's Company, that Hart left the Stage upon it, and Mobun surviv'd not long after.

One only Theatre being now in Possession of the whole Town, the united Patentees impos'd their own Terms, upon the Actors; for the Profits of acting were then divided into twenty Shares, ten of which went to the Proprietors, and the other Moiety to the principal Actors, in fuch Sub-divisions as their different Merit might pretend to. These Shares of the Patentees were promiscuously fold out to Money-making Persons, call'd Adventurers, who, tho' utterly ignorant of Theatrical Affairs, were still admitted to a proportionate Vote in the Management of them; all particular Encouragements to Actors, were by them; of Consequence, look'd upon as so many Sums deducted from their private Dividends. While therefore the Theatrical Hive had so many Drones in it, the labouring Actors, fure, were under the highest Discouragement, if not a direct State of Oppression. Their Hardship will at least appear in a much stronger Light, when compar'd to our latter Situation, who with scarce half their Merit, succeeded to be Sharen under a Patent upon five times easier Conditions: For as they had but half the Profits divided among ten, or more of them; we had three fourths of the whole Profits, divided only among three of us: And as they might be faid to have ten Task-masters over them, we never had but one Affistant-manager (not an Actor) join'd with us; who, by the Crown's Indulgence was fometimes too of our own chusing. Under this heavy Establishment then groan'd this United Company, when I was first admitted into the lowest Rank of it. How they came to be reliev'd by King William's Licence

h

ar

nt

ti

C

m

25 ito

ces

of

ted

m-

ear

100 pon

the

nwo

ting

the liffe-

-ma-

to a; all hem;

educ-

refore

he la-

ifcou-

Their

onger

Who

haren

: For

whole

is they

m, we

Actor

ce was

heavy

npany,

of it.

illiam's

Licence in 1695, how they were again dispers'd, early in Queen Anne's Reign; and from what Accidents Fortune took better Care of us, their unequal Successors, will be told in its place: But to prepare you for the opening so large a Scene of their History, methinks I ought (in Justice to their Memory too) to give you inch particular Characters of their Theatrical Merit, is in my plain Judgment they seem'd to deserve. Pretuming then, that this Attempt may not be disagreeable to the Curious, or the true Lovers of the Theatre, take twithout farther Presace.

In the Year 1690, when I first came into this Comany, the principal Actors then at the Head of it were.

Of Men.	Of Women,
Mr. Betterton,	Mrs. Betterton,
Mr. Monfort,	Mrs. Barry,
Mr. Kynafton,	Mrs. Leigh,
Mr. Sandford,	Mrs. Butler,
Mr. Nokes,	Mrs. Monfort, and
Mr. Underbil, and	Mrs. Bracegirdle.
Mr. Leigh.	STEEL BURNEY

These Actors, whom I have selected from their Comporaries, were all original Masters in their different life, not meer auricular Imitators of one another, hich commonly is the highest Merit of the middle ank; but self-judges of Nature, from whose various ights they only took their true Instruction. If in a following Account of them, I may be oblig'd to not at the Faults of others, I never mean such Obsertions should extend to those who are now in possession the Stage; for as I design not my Memoirs shall me down to their Time, I would not lie under the aputation of speaking in their Dissavour to the Publik, whose Approbation they must depend upon for pport. But to my Purpose.

Betterton was an Actor, as Shakespear was an Auor, both without Competitors! formed for the mul Assistance, and Illustration of each others Genius!

How

How Shakespear wrote, all Men who have a Tale for Nature may read, and know -- but with what higher Rapture would he fill be read, could they conceive how Betterton play'd him! Then might the know, the one was born alone to fpeak what the o ther only knew, to write! Pity it is, that the momentary Beauties flowing from an harmonious Elocution, cannot like those of Poetry, be their own Record! That the animated Graces of the Player can live no longer than the instant Breath and Motion that presents them; or at best can but faintly glimme through the Memory, or imperfect Attestation of a few furviving Spectators. Could how Betterton spoke be as eafily known as what he spoke; then might you fee the Muse of Shakespear in her Triumph, with all their Beauties in their best Array, rising into rel Life, and charming her Beholders. But alas! find all this is fo far out of the Reach of Description, how shall I shew you Betterton? Should I therefore tell you, that all the Othellos, Hamlets, Hot fours, Mackbeths, and Brutus's, whom you may have feen find his time have fallen far short of him: This still would give you no Idea of his particular Excellence. Let u fee then what a particular Comparison may do! who ther that may yet draw him nearer to you?

You have seen a Hamlet perhaps, who, on the firt Appearance of his Father's Spirit, has thrown himfelf into all the straining Vociferation requisite to express Rage and Fury, and the House has thunder'd with Applause; tho' the mis-guided Actor was all the while (as Shakespear terms it) tearing a Passion into Ragsam the more bold to offer you this particular Instance, because the late Mr. Addison, while I sate by him, w fee this Scene acted, made the same Observation, asking me with some surprize, if I thought Hamlet should be in so violent a Passion with the Ghost, which though it might have aftonish'd, it had not provok'd him? For you may observe that in this beautiful Speech, the Passion never rises beyond an almost breathless Astonishment, or an Impatience, limited by filial Reverence, to enquire into the suspected Wrongs

te

E

E

tl

t

A

uE

afte

what

CON-

they

e 0.

mo-

Cuti-

Re-

Can

that

nmer

of a

poke

night

With

o real

fince

how e tell

Mack-

would

Let u

whe-

ne first

imfelf

xpres

h Ap-

while ags-l itance,

im, to

afking

should

which

ovok'd

autiful

almon

limited spected

Wrongs

rongs that may have rais'd him from his peaceful omb! and a Defire to know what a Spirit fo feemrly distrest, might wish or enjoyn a forrowful Son to ecute towards his future Quiet in the Grave? This s the Light into which Betterton threw this Scene; ich he opened with a Pause of mute Amazement ! en rifing flowly, to a folemn, trembling Voice, he de the Ghoft equally terrible to the Spectator, as to mself! and in the descriptive part of the natural Etions which the ghaftly Vision gave him, the bolds of his Expostulation was still governed by Decenmanly, but not braving; his Voice never rifing o that feeming Outrage, or wild Defiance of what naturally rever'd. But alas! to preserve this Mem, between mouthing, and meaning too little, to p the attention more pleafingly awake, by a temd Spirit, than by meer Vehemence of Voice, is of the Master-strokes of an Actor the most difficult to ch. In this none yet have equall'd Betterton. But n unwilling to flew his Superiority only by recounthe Errors of those, who now cannot answer to m, let their farther Failings therefore be forgotten ! rather shall I in some measure excuse them? For I not yet fure, that they might not be as much owing he false Judgment of the Spectator, as the Actor. ile the Million are so apt to be transported, when Drum of their Ear is fo roundly rattled; while take the Life of Elocution to lie in the Strength of Lungs, it is no wonder the Actor, whose end is aple, should be so often tempted, at this easy rate, to te it. Shall I go a little farther? and allow that Extreme is more pardonable than its opposite Er-I mean that dangerous affectation of the Monoor folemn Sameness of Pronunciation, which to Ear is insupportable; for of all Faults that so fretly pass upon the Vulgar, that of Flatness will the fewest admirers. That this is an Error of anflanding feems evident by what Hamlet says, in his uctions to the Players, viz.

not too tame, neither, &c.

The Actor, doubtless, is as strongly ty'd down to the Rules of Horace, as the Writer.

Si vis me flere, dolendum est Primum ipsi tibi-

He that feels not himself the Passion he would raise will talk to a sleeping Audience: But this never was the Fault of Betterton; and it has often amazed me, to see those who soon came after him, throw out in some Parts of a Character, a just and graceful Spirit, which Betterton himself could not but have applauded. Amy yet in the equally shining Passages of the same Character, have heavily dragged the Sentiment along like a dead Weight; with a long ton'd Voice, and at sent Eye, as if they had fairly forgot what they were about: If you have never made this Observation, I an contented you should not know, where to apply it.

A farther Excellence in Betterton, was that he coul vary his Spirit to the different Characters he acted. Those wild impatient Starts, that sierce and stabling Fire, which he threw into Hotspur, never can from the unrussed Temper of his Brutus (for I have more than once seen a Brutus as warm as Hotspur when the Betterton Brutus was provoked, in his Dipute with Cassus, his Spirit slew only to his Eye; he steady Look only supply'd that Terror, which he did dain'd an Intemperance in his Voice should rise to Thus with a settled Dignity of Contempt, like an unheeding Rock, he repell'd upon himself the Foam of Cassus. Perhaps the very Words of Shakespear will better let you into my Meaning:

Must I give way, and room to your rash Choler? Shall I be frighted when a Madman stares?

And a little after,

There is no Terror, Cassius, in your Looks ! &c.

bu

Tot but, in some part of this Scene, where he reroaches Cassius, his Temper is not under this Suppreson, but opens into that Warmth which becomes a sam of Virtue; yet this is that Hasty Spark of anger, hich Brutus himself endeavours to excuse.

But with whatever strength of Nature we see the oet shew, at once, the Philosopher and the Heroe, yet to like Image of the Actor's Excellence will be still imperct to you, unless Language cou'd put Colours in our lords to paint the Voice with.

to the

raile ras the

to fee

whid

Cha-

along

nd a

y west

ı, Ia

r it.

coul

acted

flaf

Cam

have

Hot four

nis Di

ye; h

he di

rife t

anu

oam

ear wi

ler?

And

Et, si vis similem pingere, pinge sonum, is enjoining a Impossibility. The most that a Vandike can arrive is to make his Portraits of great Persons seem to sink; a Shakespear goes farther yet, and tells you that his Pictures thought; a Betterton steps beyond m both, and calls them from the Grave, to breathe, and be themselves again, in Feature, Speech, and Moon. When the skilful Actor shews you all these owers united, and gratisses at once your Eye, your ar, your Understanding. To conceive the Pleasure sing from such Harmony, you must have been prent at it! 'tis not to be told you!

There cannot be a stronger Proof of the Charms of armonious Elocution, than the many, even unnatural tenes and Flights of the salse Sublime it has listed inapplause. In what raptures have I seen an Audice, at the surious Fustian and turgid Rants in Nat. is Alexander the Great! for though I can allow is Play a sew great Beauties, yet it is not without its travagant Blemishes. Every Play of the same Auor has more or less of them. Let me give you a mple from this. Alexander, in a sull crowd of ourtiers, without being occasionally call'd or pro-k'd to it, salls into this Rhapsody of Vain-glory.

Can none remember ? Yes, I know all must !

nd therefore they shall know it agen.

When Glory like the dazzling Eagle, stood Pearch'd on my Beaver, in the Granick Flood, When Fortune's Self, my Standard trembling bore, And the pale Fates stood freighted on the Shore, When the Immortals on the Billows rode, And I myself appear'd the leading God.

When these flowing Numbers came from the Mouth a Betterton, the Multitude no more defired Sense them, than our musical Connoisseurs think it essential in the celebrated Airs of an Italian Opera. Does no this prove, that there is very near as much Enchant ment in the well-govern'd Voice of an Actor, as in the fweet pipe of an Eunuch? If I tell you, there was n one Tragedy, for many Years, more in favour win the Town than Alexander, to what must we impute the its command of publick Admiration? Not to its intrinfick Merit, furely, if it swarms with Passages like this I have shewn you! If this Passage has Merit, let u fee what Figure it would make upon Canvas, what fort of Picture would rife from it. If Le Brun, who was famous for painting the Battles of this Heroe, had feen this lofty Description, what one Image could he have possibly taken from it? In what Colours would he have shewn us Glory perch'd upon a Beaver? How would he have drawn Fortune Trembling ? Or, indeed what use could he have made of pale Fates, or Immertals riding upon Billows, with this bluftering God of his own making at the head of 'em? Where, then must have lain the Charm, that once made the Publick so partial to this Tragedy? Why plainly, in the Grace and Harmony of the Actor's Utterance. For the Actor himself, is not accountable for the false Potry of his Author; That, the Hearer is to judge of; it passes upon him, the Actor can have no Quarrel to it; who, if the Periods given him are round, fmooth, spirited, and high founding, even in a false Passion, must throw out the same Fire and Grace, as may be required in one justly rising from Nature; where those hd

1

n

d

CC

inf

to dic

1

re, s P rth

n'c

any ith of fe t entia

es not

hant.

n the

as m

with

e this

ntrin

e this

let w

what

who

, had

ld he vould

How

deed

יוממות od of

then

Pub-

n the

For

Poe-

e of;

rel to

ooth

ffion,

ay be

thole his Publick ;

is Excellencies will then be only more pleasing, in proortion to the Taste of his Hearer. And I am of onion, that to the extraordinary Success of this very lay, we may impute the Corruption of so many Acrs, and Tragick Writers, as were immediately mifd by it. The unskilful Actor, who imagin'd all the erit of delivering those blazing Rants, lay only in e Strength, and strain'd Exertion of the Voice, bein to tear his Lungs, upon every false, or slight Ocfion to arrive at the same applause. And it is from ence I date our having feen the fame Reason prevant, for above fifty Years. Thus equally misguided o, many a barren-brain'd Author has stream'd into a othy flowing Style, pompoufly rolling into founding: riods, fignifying roundly nothing; of which lumber in some of my former Labours, I am someing more than fuspicious, that I may my felf have ade one. But, to keep a little closer to Betterton. When this favourite Play I am speaking of, from being too frequently acted, was worn out, and came be deferted by the Town, upon the fudden Death of Imfort, who had play'd Alexander with Success, for veral Years, the Part was given to Betterton, which, der this great Disadvantage of the Satiety it had gin, he immediately reviv'd, with so new a Lustre, at for three Days together it fill'd the House! and d his then declining Strength been equal to the Fatigue eaction gave him, it probably might have doubled its ccess; an uncommon Instance of the Power and innsic Merit of an Actor. This I mention, not onto prove what irrefiftible Pleasure may arise from a dicious Elocution, with scarce Sense to affist it; but shew you too, that tho' Betterton never wanted re, and Force, when his Character demanded it; t, where it was not demanded, he never profituted. s Power to the low ambition of a falle applause. And ther, that when, from a too advanced age, he ren'd that toilsome part of Alexander, the Play, for any Years after, never was able to impose upon the Publick; and I look upon his fo particularly supporting the false Fire and Extravagancies of that Character, to be a more surprizing Proof of his Skill, than his being eminent in those of Shakespear; because there, Truth and Nature coming to his assistance, he had not the same Difficulties to combat, and consequently, we must be less amazed at his Success, where we are more able to account for it.

Notwithstanding the extraordinary Power he shew'd in blowing Alexander once more into a blaze of admiration, Betterton had so just a Sense of what was true, or false applause, that I have heard him say, he never thought any kind of it equal to an attentive Silence; that there were many ways of deceiving an Audience into a loud one; but to keep them husht and quiet, was an applause which only Truth and Merit could a rive at: Of which art, there never was an equal Master to himself. From these various Excellencies he had fo full a Possession of the Esteem and Regard of his Auditors, that upon his Entrance into every Scene, he sem'd to seize upon the Eyes and Ears of the Giddy and Inadvertent! To have talk'd, or look'd another way, would then have been thought Infenfibility, or Ignorance. In all his Soliloquies of moment, the strong Intelligence of his attitude and aspect, drew you into such an impatient Gaze, and eager Expectation, that you almost imbib'd the Sentiment with your Eye, before the Lar could reach it.

As Betterton is the Centre to which all my Observations upon Action tend, you will give me leave, under his Character to enlarge upon that Head. In the just Delivery of poetical Numbers, particularly when the Sentiments are pathetick, it is scarce credible, upon how minute an Article of Sound depends their greatest Beauty or Inassection. The Voice of a Singer not more strictly ty'd to Time and Tune, than that of a Actor in Theatrical Elocution; The least Syllable to long, or too slightly dwelt upon, in a Period, depreciates it to nothing; which very Syllable, if rightly touch'd, shall, like the heightening Stroke of Light from he

d

on

hi

ab

W

from a Mafter's Pencil give Life and Spirit to the whole never heard a Line in Tragedy come from Betterton. wherein my Judgment, my Ear, and my Imagination were not fully fatisfy'd; which, fince his Time, I annot equally fay of any one Actor whatfoever : Not out it is possible to be much his Inferior, with great xcellencies; which I shall observe in another place. Had it been practicable to have ty'd down the clattering Hands of all the ill Judges who were commonly the Majority of an Audience, to what amazing Perfection night the English Theatre have arrived, with so just in Actor as Betterton at the Head of it! If what was fruth only, could have been applauded, how many oify Actors had shook their Plumes with shame, who from the injudicious Approbation of the Multitude, ave bawl'd and strutted into the place of Merit? If herefore the bare speaking Voice has such Allurements n it, how much less ought we to wonder, however we hay lament, that the sweeter Notes of Vocal Musick hould so have captivated even the politer World, inan apollacy from Sense, to an Idolatry of Sounds et us enquire from whence this Enchantment rifes, am afraid it may be too naturally accounted for: For then we complain, that the finest Musick, purchas'd t such vast Expence, is so often thrown away upon the of miserable Poetry, we seem not to consider, that hen the Movement of the Air, and Tone of the oice, are exquisitely harmonious, tho we regard not ne Word of what we hear, yet the Power of the Medy is so busy in the Heart, that we naturally annex leas to it of our own Creation, and, in some fort, beome ourselves the Poet to the Composer; and what pet is so dull as not to be charm'd with the Child of his vn Fancy? So that there is even a kind of Language agreeable Sounds, which like the aspect of Beauty, ithout Words, speaks and plays with the Imagination. hile this Taste therefore is so naturally prevalent, I ubt, to propose Remedies for it, were but giving lws to the Winds, or Advice to Inamorato's: And wever gravely we may affert, that Profit ought-alporticter, in his there, d not y, we more

hew'd admitrue, never ence;

lience

quiet, ald ar equal encies, sard of Scene, e Gidnother ity, or t, the tation, ar Eye,

under In the when ole, up r greatinger is at of as ble too depre rightly f Light from ways to be inseparable from the Delight of the Theatre; nay admitting that the pleasure would be heightned by the uniting them; yet, while Instruction is so little the Concern of the Auditor, how can we hope that so choice a Commodity will come to a Market where there is so seldom a Demand for it?

It is not to the Actor therefore, but to the vitiated and low Taste of the Spectator, that the Corruptions of the Stage (of what kind soever,) have been owing. If the Publick, by whom they must live, had Spirit enough to discountenance, and declare against all the Trash and Fopperies they have been so frequently fond of, both the Actors and the Authors, to the best of their Power must naturally have served their daily Table with sound and wholsome Diet.—But I have not yet done with my Article of Elocution.

As we have sometimes great Composers of Musick, who cannot sing, we have as frequently great Writer that cannot read; and tho', without the nicest Ear, no Man can be Master of poetical Numbers, yet the best Ear in the World will not always enable him to pronounce them. Of this Truth, Dryden, our first great Master of Verse and Harmony, was a strong Instance: When he brought his Play of Amphytrion to the Stage, I heard him give it its first Reading to the Actors, is which, though it is true, he delivered the plain Sense of every period, yet the whole was in so cold, so start and unaffecting a manner, that I am afraid of not being believed when I affirm it.

a

on on

ae

ry

m ftu

E

the

C

OW.

Sta n t

On the contrary, Lze, far his inferior in Poetry, was fo pathetick a Reader of his own Scenes, that I have been inform'd by an Actor who was present, that while Lee was reading to Major Mohum at a Rehearsal, Mohum, in the warmth of his admiration, threw down his Part, and said, unless I were able to play it, as well as you read it, to what purpose should I undertake it? And yet this very Author, whose Elocution rais'd admiration in so capital an Actor, when he attempted

he

be

Hi-

we

ar-

ted

sof

If

pirit

the best

nave

fick,

iters

, no

beft

pro-

great

nce :

TS, 11:

nie of being

7, W25

have while

, Mo-

down

it, 25

ertake

rais'd

mpted

be an Actor himself, soon quitted the Stage, in an onest Despair of ever making any profitable Figure here. From all this I would infer, That let our onception of what we are to speak, be ever so just, nd the Ear ever fo true, yet, when we are to deliver to an Audience (I will leave Fear out of the Question) ere must go along with the whole, a natural Freedom, nd becoming Grace, which is easier to conceive than describe: For without this inexpressible somewhat, e Performance will come out oddly difguis'd, or mewhere defectively, unfurprizing to the Hearer. f this Defect too, I will give you yet a stranger Innce, which you will allow Fear could not be the Ocsion of: If you remember Estcourt, you must have nown that he was long enough upon the Stage, not to under the least Restraint from Fear, in his Perforance: This Man was so amazing and extraordinary a imick, that no Man or Woman, from the Coquette to e Privy-Counfellor, ever mov'd or spoke before him, t he could carry their Voice, Look, Mein, and otion, instantly into another Company: I have ard him make long Harangues, and form various guments, even in the Manner of thinking, of an inent Pleader at the Bar, with every the least Artiand Singularity of his Utterance fo perfectly imita-, that he was the very alter ipfe, scarce to be diguish'd from his Original. Yet more; I have feen, on the Margin of the written part of Fallaff, which acted, his own Notes and Observations upon almost ry Speech of it, describing the true Spirit of the mour, and with what Tone of Voice, Look, and flure, each of them ought to be delivered. Yet in Execution upon the Stage, he seemed to have lost those just Ideas he had form'd of it, and almost thro: Character, labour'd under a heavy Load of Flat-: In a Word, with all his Skill in Mimickry, and owledge of what ought to be done, he never, upon Stage, could bring it truly into Practice, but was in the whole, a languid, unaffecting Actor.

u

ne

ha

f

re

et

ed,

WI

e i

is

n t

oir

avi

nita

am

Hea

eve

I

ect

y ti

ccc

Tead

us,

arti

here

0U 1

ou 1

I have shewn you so many necessary Qualifications, not one of which can be spar'd in true Theatrical Elocution, and have at the fame time proved, that with the affistance of them all united, the whole may still come forth defective; what Talents shall we say will infallibly form an Actor? This, I confess, is one of Nature Secrets, too deep for me to dive into; let us content ourselves therefore with affirming, That Genius, which Nature only gives, only can complete him. This G. nius then was so strong in Betterton, that it shone out in every Speech and Motion of him. Yet Voice, and Person, are such necessary supports to it, that by the Multitude, they have been preferred to Genius itself, or at least often mistaken for it. Betterton had a Voice of that kind, which gave more spirit to Terror, than to the fofter Passions; of more Strength than Melody, The Rage and Jealoufy of Othello, became him better than the Sighs and Tenderness of Castalio: For the in Castalio he only excell'd others, in Othello he excell'd himself; which you will easily believe, when you confider, that in spite of his Complexion, Othello has more natural Beauties than the best Actor can find in all the Magazine of Poetry, to animate his Power, and delight his Judgment with.

The Person of this excellent Actor was suitable to his Voice, more manly than sweet, not exceeding the middle Stature, inclining to the corpulent; of a serious and penetrating Aspect; his Limbs nearer the athletick, than the delicate proportion; yet however form'd, there arose from the Harmony of the wholes commanding Mein of Majesty, which the fairer-sac'd, or (as Sbakespear calls 'em) the curled Darlings of his Time, ever wanted something to be equal Masters of There was some Years ago, to be had, almost in every Print-shop, a Metzotinto, from Kneller, extremely like

him.

In all I have said of Betterton, I confine myself to the Time of his Strength, and highest power in Action, that you may make Allowances from what he was able to execute at fifty, to what you might have seen of him at past seventy; for tho' to the last he was without his equal, he might not then be equal to his former self; yet so far was he from being ever overtaken, that for many Years after his Decease, I seldom saw any of his parts, in Shakespear, supply'd by others, but it strew from me the Lamentation of Ophelia upon Hamest's being unlike, what she had seen him.

i

he li-

e'i

ich

Geout

and

the

elf,

oice

han dy.

tter

tho"

ex-

you has

l ii

wer, e to

the

6

the

ever

ole 1

ac'd

f. his es of. every like

If to

Ace was en of Thave seen, what I have seen, see what I see!

The last Part this great Master of his Profession aced, was Melanthius in the Maid's Tragedy, for his wn Benefit; when being suddenly seiz'd by the Gout, the submitted, by extraordinary Applications, to have is Foot so far reliev'd, that he might be able to walk in the Stage, in a Slipper, rather than wholly disapoint his Auditors. He was observ'd that Day, to ave exerted a more than ordinary spirit, and met with mitable Applause; but the unhappy Consequence of ampering with his Distemper was, that it sew into his lead, and killed him in three Days, (I think) in the eventy-fourth Year of his Age.

I once thought to have filled up my Work with a feeth Differtation upon Theatrical Action, but I find, y the Digressions I have been tempted to make in this account of Betterton, that all I can say upon that lead, will naturally fall in, and possibly be less tedius, if dispers'd among the various Characters of the articular Actors, I have promis'd to treat of; I shall herefore make use of those several Vehicles, which ou will find waiting in the next Chapter, to carry ou through the rest of the Journey, at your Leisure.

re-combit 50 bit at that the

THE RESERVE OF THE STREET, MICH.

settle trailing street

CHAP. V.

The Theatrical Characters of the Principal Actors, in the Year 1690, continu'd.

A few Words to Critical Auditors.

h

n ti

r

or

on

ay th

h

H

ke,

h

rce y, a

ofe

r'd

gne d t

cru

had

otic

ne :

ntur

ne,

ne (

Mr

er it

"HO', as I have before observ'd, Women were not admitted to the Stage, 'till the Return of King Charles, yet it could not be so suddenly supply'd with them, but that there was still a necessity, for some time, to put the handsomest young Men into Petticoats; which Kynaston was then said to have worn, with fuccess; particularly in the part of Evadne, in the Maid's Tragedy, which I have heard him speak of and which calls to my Mind a ridiculous Diffress that arose from these sorts of Shifts, which the Stage was then put to. The King coming a little before his usual Time to a Tragedy, found the Actors not ready to begin, when his Majesty not chusing to have a much Patience as his good Subjects, fent to them, to know the Meaning of it; upon which the Master of the Company came to the Box, and rightly judging that the best Excuse for their Default, would be the true one, fairly told his Majesty, that the Queen was not shaw'd yet: The King, whose good Humow lov'd to laugh at a Jest, as well as to make one, accepted the Excuse, which serv'd to divert him, 'till the male Queen cou'd be effeminated. In a Word, Kynafron, at that Time, was so beautiful a Youth, that the Ladies of Quality prided themselves in taking him with them in their Coaches, to Hyde-Park, in his Theatrical Habit, after the Play; which in those Days, they might have sufficient Time to do, because Plays then, were used to begin at four a Clock: The Hour that People of the same Rank, are now going to Dinner. Of this Truth, I had the Curiofity to enquire, and had it confirmed from om his own Mouth, in his advanc'd Age: And deed, to the last of him, his handsomeness was very tile abated; even at past fixty, his Teeth were all und, white, and even, as one would wish to see, in reigning Toast of twenty. He had something of a rmal Gravity in his Mein, which was attributed to e stately Step he had been so early confin'd to, in a male Decency. But ev'n that, in Characters of Suriority had its proper Graces; it misbecame him not the Part of Leon, in Fletcher's Rule a Wife, &c. hich he executed with a determin'd Manliness, and nest Authority, well worth the best Actor's Imition. He had a piercing Eye, and in Characters of roick Life, a quick imperious Vivacity, in his one of Voice, that painted the Tyrant truly terrie. There were two Plays of Dryden in which he one, with uncommon Lustre; in Aurenge-Zebe he ay'd Morat, and in Don Sebastian, Muley Moloch; in th these Parts, he had a sierce, Lion-like Majesty his Port and Utterance, that gave the Spectator a nd of trembling Admiration!

not

ing

ith

me, ts; rith

the

of;

that

Was

his. ady

e as

, to

r of

ing,

the

Was

nour

cep-

the

yna-

t the him

his

hole cause

The

go-

had

rmed from Here I cannot help observing upon a modest Miske, which I thought the late Mr. Booth committed his acting the Part of Morat: There are in this rce Character fo many Sentiments of avow'd Barbay, Infolence, and Vain-glory, that they blaze even a ludicrous Luftre, and doubtless the Poet intended ple to make his Spectators laugh, while they adr'd them; but Booth thought it depreciated the gnity of Tragedy to raise a Smile, in any part of it, therefore covered these kind of Sentiments with crupulous Coldness, and unmoved Delivery, as if had fear'd the Audience might take too familiar a ptice of them. In Mr. Addison's Cato, Syphax has ne Sentiments of near the fame Nature, which I htur'd to speak, as I imagin'd Kynaston would have he, had he been then living to have stood in the he Character. Mr. Addison, who had something Mr. Booth's Diffidence, at the Rehearfal of his Play, rit was acted, came into my Opinion, and own'd. teven Tragedy, on such particular Occasions might admit of a Laugh of Approbation. In Shakeston Instances of them are frequent, as in Mackbeth, Het Tour, Richard the Third, and Harry the Eighth, al which Characters, tho' of a tragical Cast, have some times familiar Strokes in them, fo highly natural to each particular Disposition, that it is impossible not to be transported into an honest Laughter at them: And these are those happy Liberties, which tho' few Authors are qualify'd to take, yet when justly taken may challenge a Place among their greatest Beautia Now whether Dryden in his Morat, feliciter Audetor may be allow'd the Happiness of having hit this Mark, feems not necessary to be determin'd by the Actor; whose Business, sure, is to make the best of his Author's Intention, as in this Part Kynaston did doubtless not without Dryden's Approbation. For these Reasons then, I thought my good Friend, Mr. Booth (who certainly had many Excellencies) carryl his Reverence for the Buskin too far, in not following the bold Flights of the Author, with that Wantonnel of Spirit which the Nature of those Sentiments demanded : For Example ! Morat, having a criminal Paffor for Indamora, promises, at her Request, for one Day, to spare the Life of her Lover Aurenge Zebe : But m chusing to make known the real Motive of his Mercy when Nourmahal fays to him.

f

h

ii

1

in

in

le

uc

A

me

B

72 1

ing at

ere ade epr

ere

m d P

d I ton

effin

ne ]

g t

nich

t 18

s A

t t

IN

'Twill not be safe to let him live an Hour! Morat filences her with this heroical Rhodomontade, I'll do't, to show my Arbitrary Power.

Risum teneatis? It was impossible not to laugh, and reasonably too, when this Line came out of the Mount of Kynaston, with the stern, and haughty Look, the attended it. But above this tyrannical, tumid Super ority of Character, there is a grave, and rational Ma jefty in Shakespear's Harry the Fourth, which tho' no fo glaring to the vulgar Fye, requires thrice the Skill and Grace to become, and support. Of this real Ms jesty Kynaston was entirely Matter; here every Sent nent came from him, as if it had been his own, as if e had himself, that instant, conceiv'd it, as if he had of the Player, and were the real King he personated ! Perfection so rarely found, that very often, in Actors f good Repute, a certain Vacancy of Look, Inanity f Voice, or superfluous Gesture, shall unmask the Man, to the judicious Spectator; who from the least of hose Errors plainly sees, the whole but a Lesson given im, to be got by Heart, from fome great Author, shose Sense is deeper than the Repeater's Understaning. This true Majesty Kynaston had so entire a Comand of, that when he whisper'd the following plain ine to Hot/pur,

Send us your Prisoners, or you'll bear of it !

e convey'd a more terrible Menace in it than the udest Intemperance of Voice could swell to. But let e bold Imitator beware, for without the Look, and It Elocution that waited on it, an Attempt of the me Nature may fall to nothing:

ne-

ral

ble

m:

few

en,

ie

1-

this

the t d

did For

Mr.

ry'd

ving

nes

man

fice

Day,

t not

ercy,

le,

, and

Nout , that

upen ! Ma

O' 1100

Skill al Ma

Sent

ment

But the Dignity of this Character appear'd in Kynan still more shining, in the private Scene between the ing and Prince his Son: There you faw Majesty, in at Sort of Grief, which only Majesty could feel ! ere the paternal Concern, for the Errors of the Son, ade the Monarch more rever'd, and dreaded: His eproaches so just, yet so unmixt with Anger (and erefore the more piercing) opening as it were the ms of Nature, with a fecret Wish, that filial Duty, d Penitence awak'd, might fall into them with Grace, d Honour. In this affecting Scene I thought Kyfon thew'd his most masterly Strokes of Nature; exeffing all the various Motions of the Heart, with the ne Force, Dignity, and Feeling they are written; adg to the whole, that peculiar, and becoming Grace, nich the best Writer cannot inspire into any Actor, t is not born with it. What made the Merit of s Actor, and that of Betterton more surprizing, was It though they both observ'd, the Rules of Truth, Nature, they were each as different in their man-H 2 ner of acting, as in their personal Form, and Featurez But Kynaston staid too long upon the Stage, till his Memory and Spirit began to fail him. I shall not therefore say any thing of his Impersections, which, at that time, were visibly not his own, but the Effects of decaying Nature.

Monfort, a younger Man by twenty Years, and at this time in his highest Reputation, was an Actor of a very different Style: Of Person he was tall, well made fair, and of an agreeable Aspect: His Voice clear, full, and melodious: In Tragedy he was the most as fecting Lover within my Memory. His Addresses had a resistless Recommendation from the very Tone of his Voice, which gave his Words such Sostness, that, a Dryden says,

They melted as they felt!

n

bi

n

he

hi

ua

f ess is let

lon ha

or

A :

is a

ter

fil

All this he particularly verify'd in that Scene of Alex ander, where the Hero throws himself at the Feet of Statira for Pardon of his past Infidelities. There we faw the Great, the Tender, the Penitent, the Despair ing, the Transported, and the Amiable, in the higher In Comedy, he gave the truest Life Perfection. what we call the Fine Gentleman; his Spirit shone the brighter for being polish'd with Decency: In Scene of Gaiety, he never broke into the Regard, that wa due to the Presence of equal, or superior Character tho' inferior Actors play'd them; he fill'd the Stage not by elbowing, and croffing it before others, or di concerting their Action, but by furpaffing them, true and masterly Touches of Nature. He never laugh at his own Jest, unless the Point of his Raillery upon another requir'd it-He had a particular Talent, giving Life to bons Mots and Repartees: The Wit the Poet feem'd always to come from him extempor and sharpen'd into more Wit, from his brilliant man ner of delivering it; he had himfelf a good Share of or what is equal to it, fo lively a Pleasantness of He mour, that when either of these fell into his Handsup the Stage, he wantoned with them, to the highest delight of his Auditors. The agreeable was so natural to him, that even in that dissolute Character of the Rover he seem'd to wash off the guilt from Vice, and give it Charms and Merit. For tho' it may be a Reproach to the Poet, to draw such Characters, not only unpunish'd, but rewarded; the Actor may still be allow'd his due Praise in his excellent Performance. And this is a distinction which, when this Comedy was afted at Whiteball, King William's Queen Mary was bleased to make in favour of Montfort, notwithstanding ter Disapprobation of the Play.

rea.

Ae-

-STE

hat

de-

dat

of a

ade

lear,

t af

had

f his

t, 2

Alex

et d re we spair-

ighe

ife to ne the

Scena

t wa

acten

Stage or dif

em,

augh

y upo

ent, 1

Wit (

empar

t man

re of i

of He

ds upo

He had befides all this, a Variety in his Genius, which few capital Actors have shown, or perhaps have hought it any Addition to their Merit to arrive at; he could entirely change himself; could at once throw off the Man of Sense, for the brisk, vain, rude, and lively Coxcomb, the false, flashy Pretender to Wit, and the Dupe of his ownSufficiency: Of this he gave a delightul Instance in the Character of Sparkish in Wycberly's Country Wife. In that of Sir Courtly Nice his Excellence vas still greater: There his whole Man; Voice, Mein, nd Gesture, was no longer Monfort, but another Peron. There, the infipid, foft Civility, the elegant, nd formal Mien; the drawling Delicacy of Voice, he flately Blatness of his Address, and the empty Eninence of his Attitudes were so nicely observ'd and parded by him, that he had not been an entire Master Nature, had he not kept his Judgment, as it were Centinel upon himself, not to admit the least Likees of what he us'd to be, to enter into any Part of is Performance, he could not possibly have so comletely finish'd it. If some Years after the Death of lonfort, I my self had any Success, in either of these haracters, I must pay the Debt, I owe to his Meory, in confessing the Advantages I receiv'd from the It Idea, and strong Impression he had given me, from is acting them. Had he been remember'd, when I first tempted them, my Defects would have been more fily discover'd, and consequently my favourable Re-H 3 ception in them, must have been very much, and just ly abated. If it could be remembered how much he had the Advantage of me, in Voice and Passion, I could not, here, be suspected of an affected Modest, or of over-valuing his Excellence: For he sung a clear Counter-tenor, and had a melodious warbling Throat, which could not but set off the last Scene of Strongerly with an uncommon Happiness; which I, alast could not only struggle thro', with the faint Excuse, and real Considence of a sine Singer, under the Impersection of a seign'd, and screaming Treble, which a best could only shew you what I would have done, had Nature been more savourable to me.

This excellent Actor was cut off by a tragical Death in the 33d Year of his Age, generally lamented by his Friends, and all Lovers of the Theatre. The particular Accidents that attended his Fall, are to be found a large in the Trial of the Lord Mohun, printed among

P

h

L

A

it in

St

fo

bl

co

or or

ai

in

ak

y lar

no

1

0 eri

0-1

ake

rl

s in

me

those of the State, in Folio.

Sandford might properly be term'd the Spagnolet d the Theatre, an excellent Actor in disagreeable Cha racters: For as the chief Pieces of that famous Painter were of human Nature in Pain and Agony; h Sandford, upon the Stage, was generally as flagition as a Creon, a Maligni, an Iago, or a Machiavil could make him. The Painter, 'tis true, from the Fire of his Genius might think the quiet Objects of Nature too tame for his Pencil, and therefore chok to indulge it in its full Power, upon those of Viv lence and Horror: But poor Sandford was not the Stage-villain by Choice, but from Necessity; for he ving a low and crooked Person, such bodily Desea were too firong to be admitted in to great, or amiable Characters; fo that whenever, in any new or revi ved Play, there was a hateful or mischievous Person Sandford was fure to have no Competitor for it: No indeed (as we are not to suppose a Villain, or Traits can be shewn for our Imitation, or not for our Abhorrence) can it be doubted, but the less comely the Actor Person, the fitter he may be to perform them. The Spectator too, by not being milled by a tempting Form,

A.

he

, 1

fty,

ear

oat.

Sh

las ries,

per-

h at

had

ath

y his

ticu-

nd at nong

et d

Cha-

Pain-

itiou

iavil

ets of

chok

Vio

t the

or hadefeat

niable

revi-

: Nor

raito

bhor

A ctor

The

Form,

Form, may be less inclin'd to excuse the wicked or immoral Views or Sentiments of them. And though the hard Fate of an Oedipus, might naturally give the Humanity of an Audience thrice the Pleasure that could arise from the wilful Wickedness of the best acted Creon; yet who could fay that Sandford, in fuch a Part, was not Mafter of as true and just Action, as the best Tragedian could be, whose happier Person had recommended him to the virtuous Hero, or any other more pleafing Favourite of the Imagination ? In this disadvantageous Light, then, stood Sandford, as an Actor, admir'd by the Judicious, while the Crowd only prais'd him by their Prejudice. And so unusual had it been to fee Sandford an innocent Man in a Play, that whenever he was fo, the Spectators would hardly give him Credit in fo gross an improbability. Let me give you ar odd Instance of it, which I heard Monfort fay was a real fact. A new Play (the Name of it I have forgot) was brought upon the Stage, wherein Sanaford happened to perform the Part of an honest Statesman: The Pit after they had fat three or four Acts, in quiet Expectation, that the well-diffemoled Honesty of Sandford (for such of course they concluded it) would foon be discovered, or at least, from its Security involve the Actors in the Play, in ome furprizing Diftress or Confusion, which might raife, and animate the Scenes to come; when, at last, inding no fuch matter, but that the Catastrophe had aken quite another Turn, and that Sandfort was realy an honest Man to the end of the Play, they fairly amn'd it, as if the Author had impos'd upon them the nost frontless or incredible Absurdity.

It is not improbable, but that from Sandford's o masterly personating Characters of Guilt, the incrior Actors might think his Success chiefly owing the Defects of his Person; and from thence might ake occasion, whenever they appeared as Bravo's, a Murtherers, to make themselves as frightful and inhumane Figures, as possible. In King Charles's ime, this low skill was carry'd to such an Extravagance

gance, that the King himself who was black-brow'd. and of a fwarthy Complexion, pass'd a pleasant Remark, upon his observing the grim Looks of the Murtherers in Mackbeth; when, turning to his People, in the Box about him, Pray, what is the Mean. ing, faid he, that we never see a Rogue in a Play, but, Godsfish ! they always clap him on a black Perriwig? when, it is well known, one of the greatest Rogues in England always wears a fair one? Now, whether or no Dr. Oates, at that time, wore his own Hair, I cannot be positive: Or, if his Majesty pointed at some greater Man, then out of Power, I leave those to guess at him, who, may yet remember the changing Complexion of his Ministers. This Story I had from Betterton, who was a Man of Veracity: And, I confess, I should have thought the King's Obfervation a very just one, though he himself had been fair as Adonis. Nor can I, in this Question, help woting with the Court; for were it not too gross a Weakness to employ, in wicked Purposes, Men, whole very fuspected looks might be enough to betray them! Or are we to suppose it unnatural, that a Murther should be thoroughly committed out of an old rd Coat, and a black Perriwig?

For my own part, I profess my self to have been an Admirer of Sandford, and have often lamented that his mafterly performance could not be rewarded with that Applaufe, which I saw much inferior Ac tors met with, merely because they stood in more laudable Characters. For, tho' it may be a Merit in an Audience, to applaud Sentiments of Virtue and Honour; yet there feems to be an equal Juffice, that no Distinction should be made, as to the Excellence of an Actor, whether in a good or evil Character; fince neither the Vice nor the Virtue of it, i his own, but given him by the Poet: Therefore, why is not the Actor who shines in either, equally commendable? — No, Sir; this may be Refon, but that is not always a Rule with us; the Spectator will tell you, that when Virtue is applauded, he gives part of it to himself; because his Ap plaule,

n

But

ou

ret

er

vas

pai

d,

Re-

the eo-

lay,

Per-

atel

OW,

awo

OIII-

eave

the

tory

ity:

Ob-

been help

ofs a

vhole

em ?

rther

d red

been

ented,

arded

r Ac

more

erit m uffice, Excel-

harac-

f it, 1

refore,

equal-

Rea-

pplauis Ap-

plaule,

plause; at the same time, lets others about him see, that he himself admires it. But when a wicked Action is going forward; when an lago is meditating Revenge, and Mischies; tho' Art and Nature may be equally strong in the Actor, the Spectator is shy of his Applause, less he should, in some fort, be look'd upon as an Aider or an Abettor of the Wickedness in view; and therefore rather chuses to rob the Actor of the Praise he may merit, than give it him in a Character, which he would have you see his Silence modestly discourages. From the same fond Principle, many Actors have made it a point to be seen in parts sometimes, even slatly written, only because they stood in the savourable Light of Honour and Virtue.

I have formerly known an Actress carry this Theatrical Prudery to such a height, that she was, very near, keeping herself chaste by it: Her fondness for Virtue on the Stage, she began to think, might perwade the World, that it had made an Impression on her private Life; and Appearances of it actually went for far, that; in an Epilogue to an obscure Play, the Profits of which were given to her, and wherein she acted a Part of impregnable Chastity, she bespoke the Favour of the Ladies, by a Protestation, that in Honour of their Goodness and Virtue, she would dedicate her unblemish'd Life to their Example. Part of this Vestal Vow, I remember, was contained in the followang Verse.

Study to live the Character I play:

but alas! how weak are the strongest Works of Art, when Nature besieges it! for tho' this good Creature of far held out her Distaste to Mankind, that they would never reduce her to marry any one of 'em; ret we must own she grew, like Cæsar, greater by er Fall! Her first heroick Motive, to a Surrender, was to save the Life of a Lover, who, in his Depair, had vow'd to destroy himself, with which Act of Mercy (in a jealous Dispute once in my hearing).

the was provok'd to reproach him in these very Words; Villain! did I not save your Life? The generous Lover, in return to that first tender Obligation, gave Life to her first-born, and that pious Off-spring hath, fince, rais'd to her Memory, several innocent Grand-children.

So that, as we fee, it is not the Hood, that make the Monk, nor the Veil the Vestal; I am apt to think, that if the Personal Morals of an Actor, were to be weighed by his Appearance on the Stage, the Advantage and Favour (if any were due to either fide) might rather incline to the Traitor, than the Hem, to the Sempronius, than the Cato; or to the Syphan, than the Juba: Because no Man can naturally define to cover his Honesty with a wicked Appearance; but an ill Man might possibly incline to cover his Guilt with the appearance of Virtue, which was the Cale of the Frail Fair One, now mentioned. But be this Question decided as it may, Sandford always appeared to me the honester Man, in proportion to the Spirit wherewith he expos'd the wicked and immoral Characters he acted: For had his Heart been unfound, of tainted with the least Guilt of them, his Conscience must in spite of him, in any too near a Resemblance of himself, have been a Check upon the Vivacity of his Action. Sandford, therefore, might be faid to have contributed his equal Share with the foremost Actors, to the true and laudable Use of the Stage: And in this Light too, of being so frequently the Object of common distaste, we may honestly style him a The atrical Martyr, to Poetical Justice: For in making Vice odious, or Virtue amiable, where does the Ment differ? To hate the one, or love the other, are but leading Steps to the fame Temple of Fame, tho' at dif ferent Portals.

This Actor, in his manner of Speaking, varied very much from those I have already mentioned. He Voice had an acute and piercing Tone, which struct every Syllable of his Words distinctly upon the East He had likewise a peculiar Skill in his Look of Marking out to an Audience whatever he judged worth their

210 cm

11

i

h

ge

lds

ft .

, t

al,

ald P

im

C

efo

tgi

you

ne

2-

ff-

m.

Ker

nk,

be

Ad-

ide

ero,

bax.

but

Guilt

Cafe

this

ared

pirit arac

d, or

iena lana

ity of

id to

: Am

Object

The

aking

Merit

at dif

d very

His

ftruck ne Ear. Mark

th their

more

nore than ordinary Notice. When he deliver'd a command, he would fometimes give it more Force, y feeming to slight the Ornament of Harmony. In Pryden's Plays of Rhime, he as little as possible gluted the Ear with the Jingle of it, rather chusing then the Sense would permit him, to lose it, than to alue it.

Had Sandford liv'd in Shakespear's Time, I am infident his Judgment must have chose him, above all her Actors, to have play'd his Richard the Third: leave his Person out of the Question, which, tho turally made for it, yet that would have been the aft part of his Recommendation: Sandford had onger Claims to it; he had fometimes an uncouth ateliness in his Motion, a harsh and sullen Pride of eech, a meditating Brow, a stern Aspect, occasially changing into an almost ludicrous Triumph er all Goodness and Virtue: From thence falling to the most asswafive Gentleness, and soothing ndour of a defigning Heart. These, I say, must ve preferr'd him to it; these would have been Coers so essentially shining in that Character, that it ll be no Dispraise to that great Author, to say, ndford must have shewn as many masterly Strokes it (had he ever acted it) as are visible in the Wrig it.

When I first brought Richard the Third (with h Alterations as I thought not improper) to the ge, Sandford was engag'd in the Company then actually contained the William's Licence in Lincoln's-Inndus; otherwise you cannot but suppose my Interest shave offer'd him that Part What encourag'd, therefore, to attempt it myself at the Theatresal, was, that I imagin'd I knew how Sandford all have spoken every Line of it: If therefore, in Part of it, I succeeded, let the Merit be given him: And how far I succeeded in that Light, those y can be Judges who remember him. In order, refore, to give you a nearer Idea of Sandford, you think the late Sir John Vanburgh, who was an Admirer of Sandford, after he had seen me act it assured me, That he never knew any one Actor so particularly profit by another, as I had done by Santford in Richard the Third: You have, said he, in very Look, Gesture, Gait, Speech, and every Motions him, and have borrow'd them all, only to serve you in that Character. If therefore Sir John Vanburgh's Observation was just, they who remember me in Richard the Third, may have a nearer Conception of Sandford, than from all the critical Account I can give of him.

I come now to those other Men Actors, who, t this Time, were equally famous in the lower Life of Comedy. But I find my felf more at a Loss to give you them, in their true and proper Light, than those I have already fet before you. Why the Tragedia warms us into Joy, or Admiration, or fets our Eye on flow with Pity, we can eafily explain to another Apprehension: But it may sometimes puzzle the grvest Spectator to account for that familiar Violence Laughter, that shall seize him, at some particular Strokes of a true Comedian. How then shall Id scribe what a better Judge might not be able to a press? The Rules to please the Fancy cannot so east ly be laid down, as those that ought to govern the Judgment. The Decency too that must be observe in Tragedy, reduces, by the Manner of speaking it, on Actor to be much more like another, than they ca or need be suppos'd to be in Comedy: There the Laws of Action give them such free, and almost unlimited Liberties, to play and wanton with Nature, the the Voice, Look, and Gesture of a Comedian may be as various, as the Manners and Faces of the whole Mankind are different from one another. These at the Difficulties I-lie under. Where I want Words, there fore, to describe what I may commend, I can only hope you will give credit to my Opinion : And the Credit I shall most stand in need of, when I tell you that

h

Sp

Nokes was an Actor of a quite different Genius from y I have ever read, heard of, or feen, fince or bere his Time; and yet his general Excellence may be mprehended in one Article, viz. a plain and palpae Simplicity of Nature, which was so utterly his own at he was often as unaccountably diverting in his mmon Speech as on the Stage. I faw him once, ving an account of some Table-talk, to another Acbehind the Scenes, which, a Man of Quality accintally liftening to, was for deceived by his Manner, at he asked him, if that was a new Play, he was rearing? It feems almost amazing, that this Simpliy, so easy to Nokes, should never be caught by any of his Successors. Leigh and Underhill have been il copied, though not equall'd by others. But not the mimical Skill of Estcourt fam'd as he was for though he had often feen Nokes, could fearce give an Idea of him. After this perhaps it will be ing less of him, when I own, that though I have the Sound of every Line he spoke, nich us'd not to be thought a bad one) yet I have oftry'd, my felf, but in vain, to reach the leaft ant likeness of the Vis Comica of Nokes. Though may feem little to his Praise, it may be negatively ing a good deal to it, because I have never seen any Actor, except himfelf, whom I could not, at least ar imitate, as to give you a more than tolerable Noof his Manner. But Nokes was fo fingular a Speand was fo form'd by Nature, for the Stage. I question if (beyond the trouble of getting Words Heart) it ever cost him an Hour's Labour to arrive hat high reputation he had, and deserved. the Characters he particularly shone in, were

Martin Marr-all, Gomez in the Spanish Friar, Sir bolas Cully in Love in a Tub, Barnaby Brittle in Wanton Wife, Sir Davy Dunce in the Soldier's une, Sosia in Amphytrion, &c. &c. &c. To tell how he acted them is beyond the reach of Critical But, to tell you what Effect his action had upon Spectator, is not impossible: this then is all your

Ŧ

Note

et it

or fo

Sant

, 品

ion of

104 H

s Ob

n Ri-

on d n give

10, 1

ife of

gire gedia. Eye

other

e gra-

nce d ticular

I de

to ex-

o eaf-

rn the bferv'

it, on ey ca

ere the

t unli

e, tha

may be

ele an

there

n only

nd thi

11 .you will expect from me, and from hence I must leave ro to guess at him.

He scarce ever made his first Entrance in a Play, be he was received with an involuntary applause, not Hands only, for those may be, and have often be partially profittuted, and bespoken; but by a Gene ral Laughter, which the very Sight of him provokil and Nature cou'd not refift; yet the louder the Lauri the graver was his Look upon it; and fure, the me culous Solemnity of his Features were enough to his fet a whole Bench of Bishops into a Titter, cou'd have been honour'd (may it be no Offence to fuppor it) with fuch grave, and right reverend Auditors. the ludicrous Distresses, which by the Laws of O medy, Folly is often involv'd in; he funk into fu a mixture of piteous Pufillanimity, and a Consternation fo rufully ridiculous and inconfolable, that when he h shook you to a Fatigue of Laughter, it became moot point, whether you ought not to have pity him. When he debated any matter by himself, I would that up his mouth with a dumb studious pow and roll his full Eye, into fuch a vacant Amazemen fuch a palpable Ignorance of what to think of it, the his filent Perplexity (which would fometimes hold his feveral Minutes) gave your Imagination as full Content as the most absurd thing he could say upon it. Character of Sir Martin Mar-all, who is always con mitting Blunders to the prejudice of his own Interes when he had brought himself to a Dilemma in his fairs, by vainly proceeding upon his own Head, a was afterwards afraid to look his governing Serva and Counsellor in the Face; what a copious, and stressful Harangue have I seen him make, with Looks (while the House has been in one continu Roar, for feveral Minutes) before he could press with his Courage to speak a Word to him! The might you have, at once, read in his Face Vexation that his own Measures, which he had piqued him upon, had fail'd. Envy of his Servant's super Wit-Diffress-to retrieve, the Occasion he had he

Hu

an

ip

am

/ei

Shame — to confess his Folly: and yet a fullen Deire, to be reconcil'd, and better advis'd, for the future! What Tragedy ever shew'd us such a Tumult of Pasions, rising, at once, in one Bosom! or what busin'd Hero standing under the Load of them, could have more effectually mov'd his Spectators, by the nost pathetick Speech, than poor miserable Nokes did, by this filent Eloquence, and piteous Plight of his Feaures?

you

y, be

not d

been

Gene vok't

augh

ridi-

i'd l

appo

of O

o fod

natio

he h ame

pity

elf, l

powt

emen it, the old his

onten

Int

rs com

ad,

Serva

and d ntint

preva

1 Th

xation

him

fupen had k

She

His Person was of the middle size, his Voice clear, and audible; his natural Countenance grave, and sover; but the Moment he spoke, the settled Seriousness of his Features was utterly discharg'd, and a dry, wolling, or laughing Levity took such sull Possession of him, that I can only refer the Idea of him to your magination. In some of his low Characters, that ecame it, he had a shuffling Shamble in his Gait, with o contented an Ignorance in his aspect, and an aukter absurdity in his Gesture, that had you not known im, you could have not believ'd, that naturally he sould have had a Grain of common Sense. In a Word, I am tempted to sum up the Character of Wokes, as a Comedian, in a Parodie of what Shakeshear's Mark Antony says of Brutus, as a Hero.

His Life was Laughter, and the Ludicrous So mixt, in him, that Nature might stand up, And say to all the World—This was an Actor.

Leigh was of the mercurial kind, and though not of strict an observer of Nature, yet never so wanton in its performance, as to be wholly out of her Sight. In Humour, he lov'd to take a full Career, but was areful enough to stop short, when just upon the Presipice: he had great Variety, in his manner, and was amous in very different Characters: In the canting, grave Hypocristy of the Spanish Friar, he stretcht the Veil of Piety so thinly over him, that in every Look, Word and Motion, you saw palpable, wicked Slyes shine through it—Here he kept his Vivacity denurely consin'd, till the pretended Duty of his Function tion demanded it; and then he exerted it, with cholerick facerdotal Infolence. But the Friar is Character of fuch glaring Vice, and fo ftrongly drawn, that a very different Actor cannot but hit upon the broad Jests, that are remarkable, in every Scene of it. Though I have never yet feen any one, that has fill'd them with half the Truth, and Spirit of Leigh-Leigh rais'd the Character as much above the Poet Imagination as the Character has fometimes rais'do ther Actors above themselves ! and I do not doubt, but the Poet's Knowledge of Leigh's Genius help'd him m many a pleafant Stroke of Nature, which without that Knowledge never might have enter'd into his Conception, Leigh was so eminent in this Character, that the late Earl of Dorfet (who was equally an Admirer, and a Judge of Theatrical Merit) had a whole Length of him, in the Friar's Habit, drawn by Kneller: The whole Portrait is highly painted, and extreamly like him. But no wonder Leigh arriv'd to fuch Fame, a what was fo compleatly written for him; when Ch. racters that would make the Reader yawn, in the Closet, have by the Strength of his Action, been lifted into the lowdest Laughter on the Stage. Of this kind was the Scrivener's great boobily Son in the Vik lain; Ralph, a stupid, staring, Under-servant, in Sir Solomon Single. Quite opposite to those were Sir Jolly Jumble, in the Soldier's, Fortune, and his old Belfond in the Squire of Alfatia. In Sir Jolly he was all Life, and laughing Humour; and when Noker atted with him in the same Play, they returned the Ball to dexteroully upon one another, that every Scene be tween them, feem'd but one continued Rest of Excellence but alas! when those Actors were gone, that Comedy and many others, for the fame Reason, were rarely known to stand upon their own Legs; by seeing no more of Leigh or Nokes in them, the Charac ters were quite funk, and alter'd. In his Sir William Belfond, Liegh shew'd a more spirited Variety, that ever I saw, any Actor, in any one Character come to: The Poet, 'tis true, had here, exactly chalk'd for

th 1

15 4

rawn,

n the

ne of

igh-

Poet's

t, but

im to

t that

at the

r, and

gth of

The

y like me, n

Cha-

in the n lift-

f thu

ne Vik

ere Sir

is old

ne was

kes acne Ball

ne be

Excel

gone

eason, es; by

harac

Villias

, that

ome w k'd for

him,

im, the Out-lines of Nature; but the high Colourng, the strong Lights and shades of Humour, that eniven'd the whole, and struck our Admiration, with surprize and Delight, where wholly owing to the Acor. The easy Reader might, perhaps, have been sleas'd with the Author without discomposing a Feaure; but the Spectator must have heartily held his ides, or the Actor would have heartily made them ch for it.

Now, though I observed before, that Nokes never as tolerably touch'd by any of his Successors; yet, this Character, I must own, I have seen Leigh exemely well imitated, by my late facetious Friend eikethman; who though far short of what was inimiible, in the Original, yet as to the general Refemlance, was a very valuable Copy of him: and, as I now Penkethman cannot yet be out of your Memory, have chosen to mention him here, to give you the near-It Idea I can, of the Excellence of Leigh in that partiplar Light: For Leigh had many masterly Variations, hich the other cou'd not, nor ever pretended to reach; articularly in the Dotage, and Follies of extreme old ge, in the Characters of Fumble in the Fond Husband. nd the Toothless Lawyer, in the City Politicks; both hich Plays liv'd only by the extraordinary Perforance of Nokes and Leigh.

There were two other Characters, of the farcical ind, Geta in the Prophetess, and Crack in Sir Courtly lite, which as they are less confin'd to Nature, the I-itation of them was less difficult to Penkethman; who, say the Truth, delighted more in the whimfical, than the natural; therefore, when I say he sometimes rembled Leigh, I reserve this Distinction, on his Matr's side; that the pleasant Extravagancies of Leigh the Flowers of his own Fancy, while the less trille Brain of my Friend was contented to make use the Stock his Predecessor had lest him. What I we said, therefore, is not to detract from honest linky's Merit, but to do Justice to his Predecessor and though, 'tis true, we as seldom see a good Act, as a great Poet arise from the bare Imitation of another!

I 3

other's Genius; yet, if this be a general Ru Penkethman was the nearest to an Exception from it for with those, who never knew Leigh, he might ver well have pas'd for a more than common Original. Ye again, as my Partiality for Penkethman ought not lead me from Truth, I must beg leave (though out its Place) to tell you fairly what was the best of him that the Superiority of Leigh may fland in its due Light -Penkethman had certainly, from Nature, a gra deal of comic Power about him; but his Judgme was by no means equal to it; for he would make in quent Deviations into the Whimfies of an Harley By the way, (let me digress a little farther) whaten Allowances are made for the License of that Change ter, I mean of an Harlequin, whatever Pretences m be urg'd from the Practice of the ancient Come for its being play'd in a Mask, refembling no part the human Species; I am apt to think, the best la cufe a modern Actor can plead for his continuing it that the low, fenfeless, and monitrous things he in and does in it, no theatrical Affurance could through, with a bare Face : Let me give you and stance of even Penkethman's being out of Countenant for want of it: When he first play'd Harlequin in the Emperor of the Moon, several Gentlemen (who in vertently judg'd by the Rules of Nature) fancy'd the a great deal of the Drollery, and Spirit of his Gr mace was loft, by his wearing that useless, unmeaning Masque of a black Cat, and therefore infifted, that the next time of his acting that Part, he should play with out it : Their defire was accordingly comply'd withbut alas! in vain- Penketbman could not tal to himself the Shame of the Character without ber conceal'd —he was no more Harlequin—his Humo was quite disconcerted! his Conscience could not wi the same Effronterie declare against Nature, without Cover of that unchanging Face, which he was f would never blush for it! no! it was quite anoth Case! without that Armour his Courage could come up to the bold Strokes, that were necessary

be

nei

V

ap<sub>l</sub> ck

or c

at piri

uc)

Ruk

n it:

Ye

ot w

out d

him

Light

gra

e f lequi

ater

ham

s m

med

part

A E

giti

e fay

ld g enan

in t o ina

'd the

eani

hat th

with v

with ot ta

t ben

lume

ot W

outt

28 f

anou

uld #

ffary !

get the better of common Sense. Now if this Cirumstance will justify the Modesty of Penketbman, it annot but throw a wholfome Contempt on the low Merit of an Harlequin. But how farther necessary the Mask is to that Fool's Coat, we have lately had a tronger Proof, in the Favour, that the Harlequin Saupage met with, at Paris, and the ill Fate that folow'd the same Sawvage, when he pull'd off his Masque in London. So that it seems, what was Wit from n Harlequin, was something too extravagant from a man Creature. If therefore Penkethman, in Chaacters drawn from Nature, might sometimes launch ut into a few gamesome Liberties, which would not ave been excus'd from a more correct Comedian; yet. n his manner of taking them, he always feem'd to ne, in a kind of Conciousness of the Hazard he was unning, as if he fairly confes'd, that what he did vas only as well as he could do-That he was wiling to take his Chance for Success, but if he did not neet with it, a Rebuke would break no Squares; he ould mend it another time, and would take whatever leas'd his Judges to think of him, in good part; and have often thought, that a good deal of the Favour he et with, was owing to his feeming humble way of aving all Pretence to Merit, but what the Town would please to allow him. What confirms me in this pinion is, that when it has been his ill Fortune to leet with a Disgraccia, I have known him say apart himself, yet loud enough to be heard—Odfo! believe I am a little wrong bere! which once was well received by the Audience, that they turn'd heir Reproof into applause.

Now the Judgment of Leigh always guarded the appier Sallies of his Fancy, from the least Hazard Disapprobation: he seem'd not to court, but to atck your applause, and always came off victorious; or did his highest affurance amount to any more, than at just Considence, without which the commendable pirit of every good Actor must be abated; and of his Spirit Leigh was a most perfect Master. He was uch admir'd by King Charles, who us'd to distinguish him, when spoke of, by the Title of his Astor. Which however makes me imagine, that in his Exilithat Prince might have received his first Impression good Actors from the French Stage; for Leigh his more of that farcical Vivacity than Nokes; but Noke was never languid by his more strict adherence to Nature, and as far as my Judgment is worth taking, if the intrinsick Merit could be justly weighed, Nokes mut have had the better in the Balance. Upon the unsurtunate Death of Monfort, Leigh fell ill of a Feval and dy'd in a Week after him, in December, 1692.

Underhill was a correct, and natural Comedian, h particular Excellence was in Characters, that may be called Still-life, I mean the fliff, the heavy, and it flupid; to these he gave the exactest and most expedfive Colours, and in some of them; look'd, as if were not in the Power of human Passions to alter Feature of him. In the folemn Formality of Obadia in the Committee, and in the boobily heaviness of La poop in the Squire of Alfatia, he feem'd the immore able Log he stood for ! a Countenance of Wood could not be more fix'd than his, when the Blockhead of Character required it : His Face was full and long; from the Crown to the end of his Nose, was the show ter half of it, so that the Disproportion of his lower Features, when foberly compos'd, with an unwandering Eye hanging over them, threw him into the most lunpish, moping Mortal, that ever made Beholders me ry! not but, at other times, he could be waken into Spirit equally ridiculous-In the coarse, rustid Humour of Justice Clodpate, in Epsome Wells, he was a delightful Brute! and in the blunt Vivacity of Sampson, in Love for Love, he shew'd all that true per verse Spirit, that is commonly seen in much Wit, as ill Nature. This Character is one of those few well written, with fo much Wit and Humour, that a Actor must be the grossest Dunce, that does not appear with an unusual Life in it: But it will still shews great a Proportion of Skill, to come near Underbill the acting it, which (not to undervalue those who w m of had

tor:

xik

Na

their

muf

nfor-

ever,

× 12

ay be

if t lters

of La

move

could

d of long;

e shor-

s lower

nderin

oft lum

rs ma

akene

ruftic

he w y of S

rue per

Vit, an

few

that a t appea

thew !

lerbill yho fo

ne after him) I have not yet feen. He was particuy admir'd too, for the Grave-digger in Hamlet. The the Town, upon that Play's being acted for his Bet, wherein, after his Age had some Years oblig'd to leave the Stage, he came on again, for that Day, perform his old Part; but, alas! fo worn, and bled, as if himself was to have lain in the Grave he digging; when he could not more excite Laughter, Infirmities were difmis'd with Pity : He dy'd foon r, a super-annuated Pensioner, in the List of those, , were supported by the joint Sharers, under the Patent granted to Sir Richard Steele.

The deep Impressions of these excellent Actors which ceiv'd in my Youth, I am afraid, may have drawn into the common Foible of us old Fellows; which Fondness, and perhaps, a tedious Partiality for the fures we have formerly tafted, and think are now n off, because we can no longer enjoy them. efore I lie under that Sufpicion, though I have red nothing incredible, or out of the Reach of a Judge's Conception, I must appeal to those Few. are about my own Age, for the Truth and Likeof these Theatrical Portraits.

here were, at this time, several others in some deof Favour with the Publick, Powell, Verbruggen, liams, &c. But as I cannot think their best Imements made them, in any wife, equal to those I spoke of, I ought not to range them in the same Neither were Wilks, or Dogget, yet come to stage; nor was Booth initiated till about fix Years them; or Mrs. Oldfield known, till the Year I must therefore reserve the four last for their er Period, and proceed to the Actresses, that were os with Betterton, at the latter End of the last mry.

is. Barry was then in possession of almost all the Parts in Tragedy: With what skill she gave 94 The Life of Mr. COLLEY CEBBER, &c.

Life to them, you will judge from the Words of Dryden, in his Preface to Cleomenes, where he says, Mrs. Barry, always excellent, bas in this Tragedy excell'd her felf, and gain'd a Reputation, beyond any Woman I have ever feen on the Theatre.

I very perfectly remember her acting that Part; and however unnecessary it may seem, to give my Judgment after Dryden's, I cannot help saying, I do not only close with his Opinion, but will venture to add, that (tho' Dryden has been dead these thirty eight Years) the same Compliment, to this Hour, may be due to her Excellence. And the' fhe was then, not a little, past her Youth, she was not, till that time, fully arriv'd to her Maturity of Power and Judgment; From whence I would observe, That the short Life of Beauty, is not long enough to form a complete Actress. In Men, the Delicacy of Person is not so abfolutely necessary, nor the Decline of it so soon taken notice of. The Fame Mrs. Barry arriv'd to, is a particular Proof of the Difficulty there is, in judging with Certainty, from their first Trials, whether young People will ever make any great Figure on the Theatre, There was, it feems, fo little Hope of Mrs. Barry at her first setting out, that she was, at the End of the first Year, discharg'd the Company, among other that were thought to be a useless Expence to it. take it for granted, that the Objection to Mrs. Barn at that Time, must have been a defective Ear, or some unskilful Diffenance, in her manner of pronouncing But where there is a proper Voice, and person, with the addition of a good Understanding, Experience tell us, that fuch Defect is not always invincible; of which not only Mrs. Barry, but the late Mrs. Oldfield, at eminent Instances. Mrs. Oldfield had been a Year, the Theatre-Royal, before the was observ'd to git any tolerable Hope of her being an Actress; four like, to all manner of Propriety, was her Speaking How unaccountably, then, does a Genius for the

o le

hi

ldn

he tight

James's

Stage make its way towards Perfection? For, notwithfanding these equal Disadvantages, both these Actresses, the of different Excellence, made themselves complete Mistresses of their Art, by the Prevalence of their Understanding. If this Observation may be of any Use, to the Masters of future Theatres, I shall not then have made it to no purpose.

'X-

ind

dg-

on-

dd,

ght

be ot a ful-

nt:

e of

Ac-

ken

is 1

ging

oung

arry, f the hers

t.

Barry

fom

cing

With

e tel

vhich

d, an gife o

lo un

king

or th

Stag

Mrs. Barry, in Characters of Greatness, had a preence of elevated Dignity, her Mein and Motion fuperb, and gracefully majeftic; her Voice full, clear, nd firong, so that no Violence of Passion could be to much for her: and when Distress, or Tenderness posses'd her, she subsided into the most affecting Meody, and Softness. In the Art of exciting pity, she ad a Power beyond all the Actresses I have yet seen, what your Imagination can conceive. Of the forner of these two great Excellencies, she gave the most elightful Proofs in almost all the Heroic Plays of Oryden and Lee; and of the latter, in the fofter Pafins of Otway's Manimia and Belvidera. In Scenes Anger, Defiance, or Refentment, while the was npetuous, and terrible, the pour'd out the Sentiment with an enchanting Harmony, and it was this particua Excellence, for which Dryden made her the aboveecited Compliment, upon her acting Cassandra in his komenes. But here, I am apt to think his Partiality r that Character, may have tempted his Judgment let it pass for her Master-piece; when he could not at know, there were several other Characters in hich her Action might have given her a fairer Preence to the Praise he has bestow'd on her, for Cassanra; for, in no-part of that, is there the least ground or Compassion, as in Monimia; nor equal Cause for dmiration, as in the nobler Love of Cleopatra, or he tempestuous Jealousy of Roxana. Twas in these ights, I thought Mrs. Barry shone with a much ghter Excellence than in Cassandra. She was the of Person whose Merit was distinguish'd, by the Inalgence of having an annual Benefit Play, which as granted to her alone, if I mistake not, first in King

Tames's Time, and which became not common to a thers, 'till the Division of this Company, after the Death of King William's Queen Mary. This great Actress dy'd of a Fever, towards the latter End of Queen Anne; the Year I have forgot; but perhan you will recollect it, by an Expression that fell from her in blank Verse, in her last Hours, when she was delirious, with the control of the control of

Ha, ha! and fo they make us Lords by Dozem!

Mrs. Betterton, tho' far advanc'd in Years, wash great a Miltress of Nature, that even Mrs. Barry, wh acted the Lady Mackbeth after her, could not in the Part, with all her superior Strength, and Melody of Voice, throw out those quick and careless Stroker Terror, from the Diforder of aguilty Mind, which the other gave us, with a Facility in her Manner, the render'd them at once tremendous, and delightful Time could not impair her Skill, tho' he had brough her Person to decay. She was, to the last, the Admiration of all true Judges of Nature, and Loven of Shake pear, in whose Plays she chiefly excell'd, and without a Rival. When the quitted the Stage, feve ral good Actreffes were the better for her Inftruction. She was a Woman of an unblemish'd, and sobe Life a and had the Honour to teach Queen Anne, who Princess, the Part of Semandra in Mithridates, which the acted at Court in King Charles's Time. After the Death of Mr. Betterton, her Husband, that Princel when Queen, order'd her a Pension for Life, but the liv'd not to receive more than the first half Year & it.

h rc

la Ir

is

if

en

Hae' ld.

e ill

tion

bul

ho

hear

Mrs. Leigh, the Wife of Leigh, already mention's had a very droll way of dreffing the pretty Foibles fuperannuated Beauties. She had, in herfelf, a good deal of Humour, and knew how to infuse it into the affected Mothers, Aunts, and modest stale Maids, that had miss'd their Market; of this fort were the Modifi Mother in the Chances, affecting to be politely commode, for her own Daughter; the coquette Prude of an Aunt, in Sir Courtly Nice, who prides herself in being chafte, and cruel, at Fifty; and the languishing Lady tron)

Tady Wiftfort, in The Way of the World: In all thele, with many others, she was extremely entertaining, and painted, in a lively manner, the blind Side of Nature.

Mrs. Butler, who had her Christian Name of Charlette given her by King Charles, was the Daughter of a decay'd Knight, and had the Honour of that Prince's Recommendation to the Theatre; a Provilent Restitution, given to the Stage in kind, what he had sometimes taken from it: The Publick, at least, vas oblig'd by it; for she prov'd not only a good Acrefs, but was allowed, in those Days, to fing and ance to great Perfection. In the Dramatick Opera's of Disclesian, and that of King Arthur, she was a capital. nd admired Performer. In speaking too, she had a weet-ton'd Voice, which, with her naturally genteel ir, and fenfible Pronunciation, render'd her wholly distress of the amiable, in many serious Characters. Parts of Humour too she had a manner of blendng her assuafive Softness, even with the Gay, the ively, and the Alluring. Of this she gave an areeable Instance, in her action of the (Villers) Duke f Buckingham's second Constantia in the Chances. which, if I should say, I have never seen her ceeded. I might still do no wrong to the late Mrs. Idheld's lively Performance of the fame Character. Ir. Oldfield's Fame may spare Mrs. Butler's Action is Compliment, without the least Diminution, or lipute of her Superiority, in Characters of more moent.

as fo who that y of 自電子音音音

TS of and feve-

ructi

Sober

when

which

er the

ncels it the

ar d tion'd

bles of a good

to the s, that

Aodif

com-Prude

felf in ishing

Lady

Here I cannot help observing, when there was but ne Theatre in London, at what unequal Salaries, comr'd to those of later Days, the hired Actors were then ld, by the absolute Authority of their frugal Masters, e Patentees; for Mrs. Butler had then but Forty lillings a Week, and could she have obtain'd an adtion of ten Shillings more (which was refus'd her) buld never have left their Service; but being offer'd own Conditions, to go with Mr. Ashbury to Dublin no was then raising a Company of Actors for that leatre, where there had been none fince the Revolution) her Discontent, here, prevail'd with her to accept of his offer, and he found his Account in her Value. Were not those Patentees most sagacious Oeconomists, that could lay hold on so notable an Expedient, to lessen their Charge? How gladly, in my Time of being a Sharer, would we have given four times her Income, to an Actress of equal Merit?

Mrs. Monfort, whose second Marriage gave her the Name of Verbruggen, was Mistress of more variety of Humour, than I ever knew in any one Woman Ac-This variety too was attended with an equal Vivacity, which made her excellent in Characters extremely different. As the was naturally a pleafant Mimick, she had the Skill to make that Talent useful on the Stage, a Talent which may be surprising in a Conversation, and yet be loft when brought to the Theatre, which was the Case of Estcourt already mentioned: But where the Elocution is round, diffind, voluble, and various, as Mrs. Montfort's was, the Mimick, there, is a great affiftant to the Actor. Nothing, tho' ever so barren, if within the Bounds of Nature, could be flat in her Hands. She gave many heightening Touches to Characters but coldly written, and often made an Author vain of his Work, that in it felf had but little Merit. She was so fond of Humour, in what low Part foever to be found, that the would make no scruple of defacing her fair Form, to come heartily into it; for when she was eminent in several desirable Characters of Wit and Humour, in higher Life, she would be, in as much Fancy, when descending into the antiquated Abigail, of Fletcher, as when triumphing in all the Airs and vain Graces of a fine Lady; a Merit, that few Actreffes care for. In a Play of D'urfey's, now forgotten, call'd, The Weftern Lass, which Part she acted, she transformed her whole being, Body, Shape, Voice, Language, Look, and Features, into almost another Animal; with a ftrong Devonsbire Dialect, a broad laughing Voice, 2 poking Head, round Shoulders, an unconceiving Eye, and the most be-diz'ning, dowdy Dress, that ever covered the untrain'd Limbs of a Joan Trot. To have feen

ht

ea fo

tu

bu

ur

be

Con

her here, you would have thought it impossible the same Creature could ever have been recovered, to what was as easy to her, the Gay, the Lively, and the Desirable. Nor was her Humour limited to her Sex; for, while her Shape permitted, she was a more adroit pretty Fellow, than is usually seen upon the Stage: Her asy Air, Action, Mein and Gesture, quite chang'd from the Quoif, to the cock'd Hat, and a Cavalier in ashion. People were so fond of seeing her a Man, that when the Part of Bays in the Rehearfal, had, for some ime, lain dormant, she was defired to take it up, which have seen her act, with all the true coxcombly Spiit, and Humour, that the Sufficiency of the Charac-

en required.

1-

).

4

of 15

he

of

Cal,

X-

int se-

in

he

dy

ct,

Ai-

NO-

Va-iny

rit•

hat

of

hat

rm,

t in

in

hen

of a

In

Vef-

her

ook,

h a

e, 2

Eye,

ove-

feen!

her

But what found most Employment for her whole vaous Excellence at once, was the Part of Melantha, in Marriage-Alamode. Melantha is as finish'd an Impernent, as ever flutter'd in a Drawing-Room, and feems contain the most compleat System of Female Foppe-, that could possibly be crowded into the tortur'd orm of a Fine Lady. Her Language, Drefs and Moon, Manners, Soul, and Body, are in a continual Hurto be fomething more, than is necessary, or comendable. And tho' I doubt it will be a vain Labour. offer you a just Likeness of Mrs. Monfort's Action. t the fantastick Impression is still so strong in my lemory, that I cannot help faying fomething, tho ntaffically, about it. The first ridiculous Airs that eak from her, are, upon a Gallant, never feen fore, who delivers her a Letter from her Father, remmending him to her good Graces, as an honoura-Lover. Here now, one would think the might turally shew a little of the Sex's decent Reserve, ough never to flightly cover'd! No, Sir; not a Titof it; Modesty is the Virtue of a poor soul'd ountry Gentlewoman; she is too much a Court Lady, be under so vulgar a Confusion; she reads the Lettherefore with a careless dropping Lip, and an ected Brow, humming it haftily over, as if the were patient to out-go her Father's Commands, by making complete Conquest of him at once; and, that the K 2 Letter

Letter might not embarrass her Attack, crack ! she crum. bles it at once, into her Palm, and pours upon him her whole Artillery of Airs, Eyes, and Motion; down goes her dainty, diving Body, to the Ground, as if she were finking under the conscious Load of her own Attrac. tions; then lanches into a Flood of Fine Language, and Compliment, still playing her Chest forward in fifty Falls and Rifings, like a Swan upon waving Wa ter; and, to complete her Impertinence, she is forpidly fond of her own Wit, that she will not give he Lover leave to praise it: Silent affenting Bows, and vain Endeavours to speak, are all the share of the Conversation he is admitted to, which, at last, he is no lieved from, by her Engagement to half a Score Vifts which she favims from him to make, with a Promile in return in a Twinkling.

If this Sketch has Colour enough to give you an near Conception of her, I then need only tell you that throughout the whole Character, her variety of Humour was every way proportionable; as indeed, a most Parts, that she thought worth her care, or that had the least Matter for her Fancy to work upon, I may justly say, that no Actress, from her own Conception, could have heighten'd them with more liver Strokes of Nature.

I come now to the last, and only living Person, of all those whose Theatrical Characters I have promisely you, Mrs. Bracegirdle; who, I know, would rathe pass her remaining Days forgotten, as an Actress, that to have her Youth recollected in the most favourable Light I am able to place it; yet, as she is essentially necessary to my Theatrical History, and, as I only bring her back to the Company of those, with who she pass'd the Spring and Summer of her Life, I hop it will excuse the Liberty I take, in commemorate the Delight which the Publick received from the Appearance, while she was an Ornament to the Theatre.

a

Χt

il fip it d

100

Mrs. Bracegirdle was now, but just blooming to he Maturity; her Reputation, as an Actress, gradual rising with that of her Person; never any Woman was 083

ere 20-

ige,

H

Wa-

11-

her

and

Con-

S Te-

ifits,

ife to

1 207

you

ety d

ed, i

r that

on, I

Con

lively

fon, of

rather

s, that

ourable

entiall

I only

whom

I hop

oratu

om he he The

g to he

radual

man W

in fuch general Favour of her Spectators, which, to the last Scene of her dramatick Life, she maintain'd, by not being unguarded in her private Character. This Difcretion contributed, not a little, to make her the Cara, the Darling of the Theatre: For it will be no extravagant thing to fay, Scarce an Audience faw her, that were less than half of them Lovers, without a suspected Favourite among them : And tho' fhe might be aid to have been the Universal Passion, and under the highest Temptations; her Constancy in relisting them, ferv'd but to increase the number of her Admirers: And this perhaps you will more eafily believe, when I extend not my Encomiums on her Person, beyond a Sincerity that can be suspected; for the had no greater Claim to Beauty, than what the most deirable Brunette might pretend to. But her Youth, nd lively Aspect, threw out such a Glow of Health, nd Chearfulness, that, on the Stage, few Spectators hat were not past it, could behold her without Defire. twas even a Fashion among the Gay and Young to have a Tafte or Tendre for Mrs. Bracegirdle. She inpired the best Authors to write for her; and two of them; then they gave her a Lover, in a Play, feem'd palably to plead their own Passions, and make their priate Court to her, in fictitious Characters. In all the hief Parts she acted, the Desirable was so predomiant; that no Judge could be cold enough to confider, om what other particular Excellence she became deghtful. To speak critically of an Actress, that was stremely good, were as hazardous, as to be positive one's Opinion of the best Opera Singer. People ofa judge by Comparison, where there is no Similitude. the Performance. So that, in this Case, we have ply Taffe to appeal to, and of Taffe there can be no sputing. I shall therefore only say of Mrs. Brace-idle, That the most eminent Authors always chose or for their favourite Character, and shall leave that econtestable Proof of her Merit to its own Value. et let me say, there were two very different Characis, in which the acquitted herfelf with uncommon applause: If any thing could excuse that desperate Extravagance of Love, that almost frantick Passion of Lee's Alexander the Great, it must have been, when Mrs. Bracegirdle was his Statira: As when she acted Millamant, all the Faults, Follies, and Affectation of that agreeable Tyrant, were venially method down into so many Charms and Attractions of a conscious Beauty. In other Characters, where Singing was a necessary Part of them, her Voice and Action gave a Pleasure, which good Sense, in those Days, was not asham'd to give Praise to.

She retir'd from the Stage in the Height of her Favour from the Publick, when most of her Contemporaries, whom she had been bred up with, were declining in the Year 1710, nor could she be persuaded to return to it, under new Masters, upon the most advantageous Terms, that were offer'd her; accepting one Day about a Year after, to assist her good Friend, Mr. Betterton, when she play'd Angelica, in Love for Love, for his Benefit. She has still the Happiness to retain her usual Chearfulness, and to be, without the transitory Charm of Youth, agreeable.

If, in my Account of these memorable Actors, I have not deviated from Truth, which, in the leaf Article I am not conscious of, may we not venture to fay, they had not their Equals, at any one Time, upon any one Theatre in Europe? Or, if we confine the Comparison, to that of France alone, I believe no other Stage can be much disparag'd, by being left out of the Question; which cannot properly be decided, by the fingle Merit of any one Actor; whether their Baron, or our Betterton, might be the Superior (take which Side you please) that Point reaches, either way, but to a thirteenth part of what I contend for, viz. That no Stage, at any one Period, could flew thirteen Actors standing all in equal Lights of Excellence, in their Profession: And I am the bolder, in this Challenge, to any other Nation, because no Theatre having so extended a variety of natural Characters, as the English, can have a Demand for Actors of fuch various Capacities; why then, where they could

n

ev

u e

h

B

nd nie

ri

rte

f

PO

could not be equally wanted, should we suppose them, at any one time, to have existed?

P '4

en,

the

fec-

Ited

con-

ging

Was

F2-

clin-

d to

g one

iend,

e for

els to

at the

ors, I

leaf

re to

, up-

onfine

elieve

ig left

deci-

hether

perior

either

d for,

shew

of Ex-

polder,

Cha-

Actors

e they

could

How imperfect soever this copious Account of them may be, I am not without Hope, at least, it may in some degree shew, what Talents are requisite to make Actors valuable: And if that may any ways inform, or affift the Judgment of suture Spectators, it may, as often, be of service to their publick Entertainments; for as their Hearers are, so will Actors be; worse or better, as the salfe, or true Taste applauds, or discommends them. Hence only can our Theatres improve, or must degenerate.

There is another Point, relating to the hard Condition of those who write for the Stage, which I would recommend to the Confideration of their Hearers: which is, that the extreme Severity with which they damn a bad Play, feems too terrible a Warning to hose whose untried Genius might hereafter give them good one: Whereas it might be a Temptation, to a atent Author, to make the Experiment, could he be ure, that though not approved, his Muse might, at east, be dismis'd with Decency: But the Vivacity f our modern Criticks is of late grown fo riotous. hat an unfuccefsful Author has no more Mercy shewn im, than a notorious Cheat, in a Pillory; every ool, the lowest Member of the Mob, becomes a Wit. nd will have a fling at him. They come now to a ew Play, like Hounds to a Carcass, and are all in a all Cry, fometimes for an Hour together, before the urtain rifes to throw it amongst them. Sure, those entlemen cannot but allow, that a Play condemn'd afra fair Hearing, falls with thrice the Ignominy, as hen it is refus'd that common Justice.

But when their critical Interruptions grow so loud, ad of so long a continuance, that the Attention of the People (though not so complete Criticks) is trify'd, and the Skill of the Actors quite discontred by the Tumult, the Play then seems rather fall by Assassins, than by a lawful Sentence. Is possible that such Auditors can receive Delight, or ink it any Praise to them, to prosecute so injurious, fo unimanly a Treatment? And tho' perhaps the Com paffionate, on the other fide (who know they have as good a Right to clap, and support, as others have to cet-call, damn, and defroy, may oppose this Op pression; their Good-nature, alas I contributes little in the Redress; for in this fort of Civil War, the un happy Author, like a good Prince, while his Subjects are at mortal Variance, is fure to be a Lofer by 1 Victory on either Side; for still the Commonwealth his Play, is, during the Conflict, torn to Pieces While this is the Cafe, while the Theatre is fo turbulent a Sea, and so infested with Pirates, what a Poetical Merchant of any Substance, will venture to trade in it? If these valiant Gentlemen pretend to be Lo vers of Plays, why will they deter Gentlemen, from giving them fuch, as are fit for Gentlemen to fee? In Word, this new Race of Criticks feem to me, like the Lion-Whelps in the Tower, who are so boisterously game-some at their Meals, that they dash down the Bowls of Milk, brought for their own Breakfast.

fo

As a good Play is certainly the most rational, and the highest Entertainment, that human Invention can produce, let that be my Apology (if I need any) for having thus freely delivered my Mind in behalf of those Gentlemen, who, under such calamitous Hazards, may hereaster be reduced to write for the Stage; whose Case I shall compassionate from the same Motive that prevail'd on Dido, to assist the Trojans in Di-

Non ignara mali miseris succurrere disco.

Virg.

ter it the Ye fea

Or, as Dryden has it,

ftrois.

I learn to pity Woes for like my own.

If those particular Gentlemen have sometimes made me the humbled Object of their Wit, and Humour, their Triumph at least has done me this involuntary Service, that it has driven me a Year or two sooner into a quiet Life, than otherwise, my own want of JudgThe Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c. 105

Judgment might have led me to: I left the Stage, before my Strength left me; and tho' I came to it again, for some sew Days, a Year or two after; my Reception there not only turn'd to my Account, but seem'd a fair Invitation, that I would make my Visits more frequent: But, to give over a Winner, can be no very imprudent Resolution.

M<sub>2</sub>

ve

ve

)p.

to

un-

ub.

ces.

eti-

rade Lo

from

Ina

the oully

the

and can for

lf of Ha-

tage;

Mo-

Di-

Virg.

made

mour,

intary

ant of

Judg-

CHAP. VI.

The Author's first Step upon the Stage. His Discouragements. The best Actors in Europe, ill us'd. A Revolution, in their Favour. King William grants them a Licence to act in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. The Author's Distress, in being thought a worse Actor, than a Poet. Reduc'd to write a Part for himself. His Success. More Remarks, upon Theatrical Action. Some, upon himself.

AVING given you the State of the Theatre at my first Admission to it; I am now drawing towards the several Revolutions it suffer'd, in my own Time. But (as you find by the setting out of my History) that I always intended my self the Hero of it, it may be necessary to let you know me, in my Obscurity, as well as in my higher Light, when I became one of the Theatrical Triumvirate.

The Patentees, who were now Masters of this united, and only Company of Comedians, seem'd to make it a Rule, that no young Persons, desirous to be Actors, should be admitted into Pay under, at least, half a Year's Probation; wisely knowing, that how early so wer they might be approved of, there could be no great fear of losing them, while they had, then, no other Market to go to. But, alas! Pay was the least of my Concern ;

Concern; the Joy, and Privilege of every Day seeing Plays, for nothing, I thought was a sufficient Consideration, for the best of my Services. So that it was no Pain to my Patience, that I waited full three Quarters of a Year, before I was taken into Salary of ten Shillings per Week; which, with the Assistance of Food, and Raiment, at my Father's House, I then thought a most plentiful Accession, and myself the happiest of Mortals.

The first Thing that enters into the Head of a young Actor, is that of being a Hero: In this Ambition I was foon faubb'd, by the Infufficiency of my Voice; to which might be added, an uninform'd meagre Person (tho' then not ill made) with a dismal pale Complexion. Under these Disadvantages, I had but a melancholy Prospect of ever playing a Lover, with Mrs. Bracegirdle, which I had flatter'd my Hope, that my Youth might one Day, have recommended me to. What was most promising in me, then, wasthe Aptness of my Ear; for I was foon allow'd to speak justly, tho' what was grave and ferious, did not equally become me. The first part, therefore, in which! appear'd, with any glimple of Success, was the Chaplain in the Orphan of Otway. There is in this Character (of one Scene only) a decent Pleasantry, and Sense enough to shew an Audience, whether the Actor has any himself. Here was the first Applause! ever receiv'd, which, you may be fure, made my Heart leap with a higher Joy, than may be necessary to describe; and yet my Transport was not then half fo high, as at what Goodman (who had now left the Stage) faid of me, the next Day, in my hearing. Goodman often came to a Rehearfal for Amusement, and having fate out the Orphan, the Day before; ina Conversation with some of the principal Actors, enquird what new young Fellow that was, whom he had feen in the Chaplain? Upon which, Monfort to ply'd, That's be, behind you. Goodman then turning about, look'd earnestly at me, and, after some Paule, clapping me on the Shoulder, rejoin'd, If he does me make a good After, I'll be d-'d! This Surprize of being

2

of

a

P

mmy

n'd

mal

had

ver,

pes,

me

sthe

peak

qual-

ich I

hap-

Cha-

and

Ac-

ansel

Heart

to de-

alf fo

ft the

aring.

ement,

3 ma

rs, en-

ing a-

Paule,

oes not rize of

being

eing commended, by one who had been himfelf foreinent, on the Stage, and in fo positive a Manner, was ore than I could support; in a Word it almost took way my Breath, and (laugh if you please) fairly ew Tears from my Eyes! And tho' it may be as diculous, as incredible, to tell you what a full Vanity, d Content, at that Time posses'd me, I will still make a Question, whether Alexander himself, or Charles Twelfth of Saveden, when at the Head of their wictorious Armies, could feel a greater Transport, their Bosoms, than I did then in mine, when but in Rear of this Troop of Comedians. You fee, to what w Particulars I am forc'd to descend, to give you a e Resemblance of the early and lively Follies of my ind. Let me give you another Instance, of my Diftion, more desperate, than that, of preferring the ge, to any other Views of Life. One might think, t the Madness of breaking, from the Advice, and re of Parents, to turn Player, could not eafily be eeded: But what think you, Sir, of ____ Mamony? which, before I was Two-and-twenty, I pally committed, when I had but twenty Pounds ear, which my Father had affur'd to me, and mty Shillings a Week from my Theatrical Lars, to maintain, as I then thought, the happiest ing Couple, that ever took a Leap in the Dark! after this, to complete my Fortune, I turn'd t too, this last Folly, indeed, had something and er Excuse Necessity : Had it never been my to have come to the Stage, 'tis probable, I might er have been inclin'd, or reduc'd to have wrote it: But having once expos'd my Person there, Ion ght it could be no additional Dishonour to let my s, whatever they were, take their Fortune along it. But, to return to the Progress I made as om he Actor. fort re ween Mary, having commanded the Double Dealer acted, Kynaston happen'd to be so ill, that he not hope to be able next Day to perform his of the Lord Touchavood. In this Exigence, the or, Mr. Congreve, advis'd that it might be give ven to me, if at so short a Warning, I would under take it. The Flattery of being thus distinguished by so celebrated an Author, and the Honour to act before a Queen, you may be sure, made me blind to what ever Dissiculties might attend it. I accepted the Part, and was ready in it before I slept; next Day the Queen was present at the Play, and was received with a new Prologue from the Author, spoken by Mrs. Barn, humbly acknowledging the great Honour done to the Stage, and to his Play in particular: Two Lines of it, which, though I have not since read, I still remember.

108 The Life of Mr. Colley CIBBER, &c.

But never were in Rome, nor Athens feen, So fair a Circle, or so bright a Queen.

After the Play, Mr. Compresse made me the Compliment of faying, that I had not only answer'd, but he exceeded his Expectations, and that he would flew me he was fincere, by his faying more of me to the Ma fters—He was as good as his Word, and the new pay-day, I found my Salary of fifteen, was then a vanc'd to twenty Shillings a Week. But alas! this fevourable Opinion of Mr. Congreve, made no farther Impression upon the Judgment of my good Masters it only ferv'd to heighten my own Vanity; but could not recommend me to any new Trials of my Capacity not a step farther could I get, 'till the Company was again divided; when the Defertion of the best Actor left a clear Stage, for younger Champions to mount, and shew their best Pretentions to favour. But it now Time to enter upon those Facts, that immediate ly preceded this remarkable Revolution of the The atre.

You have seen how compleat a Set of Actors were under the Government of the united Patents in 1690; if their Gains were not extraordinary, what shall we impute it to, but some extraordinary ill Management I was then too young to be in their Secrets, and therefore can only observe upon what I saw, and have single the single transfer of the secrets.

thought visibly wrong.

Though

in

Pr

Vaii

y, 1

f I

cegi

Err

Aill

er-

by 910

hat-

art,

1001

new

arry

the

s of

Dem-

mpli-

t had

W me

Ma-

neri

n - 20-

his fa-

arthe

afters;

could

acity;

ly wa

Acton

mount,

it it i

ediate-

The-

rs wen

1690 hall #

ement

d there

ve fino

Thou

Though the Success of the Prophetess, and King Arthur (two dramatic Opera's, in which the Patenees had embark'd all their Hopes) was, in appearnce, very great, yet their whole Receipts did not fo ar balance their Expence, as to keep them out of a arge Debt, which it was publickly known was, about his Time contracted, and which found work for the ourt of Chancery for about twenty Years following. Il one fide of the Caufe grew weary. But this was ot all that was wrong; every Branch of the Theatri-I Trade had been facrific'd, to the necessary fitting at those tall Ships of Burthen, that were to bring ome the Indies. Plays of course were neglected, Acrs held cheap, and flightly drefs'd, while Singers, d Dancers were better paid, and embroider'd. These leasures of course, created Murmurings; on one le, and ill Humour and Contempt on the other. Then it became necessary therefore to lessen the Charge, Resolution was taken to begin with the Salaries of e Actors; and what feem'd to make this Resolution ore necessary at this Time, was the Loss of Nokes, infort, and Leigh, who all dy'd about the fame ar: No wonder then, if when these great Pillars re at once remov'd, the Building grew weaker, and Audiences very much abated. Now in this Diffress, at more natural Remedy could be found, than to ite and encourage (tho' with some Hazard) the Intry of the surviving Actors? But the Patentees, it ms, thought the furer Way was to bring down their , in proportion to the Fall of their Audiences; make this Project more feafible, they propos'd to in at the Head of 'em, rightly judging, that if Principals acquiesc'd, their Inferiors would murmur To bring this about with a better Grace. y, under Pretence of bringing younger Actors for-, order'd several of Betterton's, and Mrs. Barry's f Parts to be given to young Powell, and Mrs. regirdle. In this they committed two palpa-Errors; for while the best Actors are in Health, full on the Stage, the Publick is always apt to be out of Humour, when those of a lower Class pretent to fland in their Places; or admitting, at this Time they might have been accepted, this Project might very probably have leffen'd, but could not poffibly men an Audience; and was a fure Lofs of that Time, Audying, which might have been better employ'di giving the Auditor Variety, the only Temptation to pall'd Appetite; and Variety is only to be given Industry: But Industry will always be lame, when the Actor has Reason to be discontented. This the Pate tees did not confider, or pretended not to value, while they thought their Power fecure, and uncontroulable But farther, their first Project did not succeed; for the the giddy Head of Powell, accepted the Parts of Be terton; Mrs. Bracegirdle had a different way of think ing, and defir'd to be excus'd, from those of Mrs. Bery; her good Sense was not to be misled by the infile ous Favour of the Patentees; she knew the Stage was wide enough for her Success, without entring into an fuch rash and invidious Competition, with Ma Barry, and therefore wholly refus'd acting any Put that properly belong'd to her. But this proceeding however, was warning enough to make Betterion's upon his Guard, and to alarm others, with Apprehen fions of their own Safety, from the Defign that w laid against him : Betterton, upon this, drew into h Party most of the valuable Actors, who, to secure the Unity, enter'd with him into a fort of Affociation, fland, or fall together. All this the Patentees for for Time flighted; but when Matters drew towards a Ch fis, they found it advisable to take the same Measure and accordingly open'd an Affociation on their part both which were feverally figned, as the Interest of Inclination of either fide led them.

During these Contentions, which the impolitical tentees had rais'd against themselves (not only by a I have mentioned, but by many other Grievant which my Memory retains not) the Actors offer'd Treaty of Peace; but their Masters imagining no confequence could shake the Right of their Authority, fus'd all Terms of Accommodation. In the me

The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c. 112

Time this Diffention was so prejudicial to their daily, Affairs, that I remember it was allow'd by both Parties; that before Christmas, the Patent had lost the getting of at least a thousand Pounds by it.

ten

ime,

nend

e, n

'd'

to:

en by

n the ater

while

able:

er the

Bet-

hink.

. Bar

infid

e wa

to any

Mn

y Par

eding

rton be

reher

at w nto h

tion,

or for

s a Ca

eafure

r part ereft (

tick'h

by th

evano

offer'd

no Ca

he me

My having been a Witness of this unnecessary Rupure, was of great use to me, when many Years after, came to be a Manager myself. I laid it down as a ettled Maxim, that no Company could flourish while he chief Actors, and the Undertakers were at varince. I therefore made it a Point, while it was possible, upon tolerable Terms, to keep the valuable Acors in humour with their Station; and tho' I was as ealous of their Encroachments as any of my Co-parters could be, I always guarded against the least Warmth, in my Expostulations with them; not but at he same Time they might see, I was perhaps more deermin'd in the Question, than those that gave a loose their Resentment, and when they were cool, were sapt to recede. I do not remember that I ever made promise to any, that I did not keep, and therefore vas cautious how I made them. This Coldness hough it might not please, at least left them nothing reproach me with; and if Temper and fair Words ould prevent a Disobligation, I was fure never to ive Offence or receive it. But, as I was but one of hree, I could not oblige others to observe the same Conduct. However, by this means, I kept many an preasonable Discontent, from breaking out, and both des found their Account in it.

How a contemptuous and over bearing Manner of eating Actors had like to have ruin'd us, in our early rosperity, shall be shewn in its Place: If suture Maagers should chance to think my way right, I suppose they will follow it; if not, when they find what hapen'd to the Patentees (who chose to disagree with their People) perhaps they may think better of it.

The Patentees then, who by their united Powers, ad made a Monopoly of the Stage, and consequently resum'd they might impose what Conditions they leas'd upon their People, did not consider, that they were all this while endeavouring to enflave a Set of Actors, whom the Publick (more arbitrary than them. felves) were inclin'd to support; nor did they reflect. that the Spectator naturally wish'd, that the Actor. who gave him Delight, might enjoy the Profits arifine from his Labour, without regard of what pretended Damage, or Injustice might fall upon his Owner, whose personal Merit the Publick was not so well acquainted with. From this Confideration, then, fere ral Persons of the highest Distinction espous'd their Cause, and sometimes, in the Circle, entertain'd the King with the State of the Theatre. At length their Grievances were laid before the Earl of Dorla. then Lord Chamberlain, who took the most effecrual Method for their Relief. The Learned of the Law were advis'd with, and they gave their Opinion. that no Patent for acting Plays, &c. could tie up the Hands of a succeeding Prince, from granting the like Authority, where it might be thought proper to trul it. But while this Affair was in Agitation, Quen Mary dy'd, which of course occasion'd a Cessation of all publick Diversions. In this melancholy Interim, Betterton, and his Adherents had more Leifure to follicit their Redress; and the Patentees now finding, that the Party against them was gathering Strength, were reduc'd to make fure of as good a Company, as the Leavings of Betterton's Interest could form; and these, you may be fure, would not lose this Occasion of fetting a price upon their Merit, equal to their own Opinion of it, which was but just double to what they had before. Powell, and Verbruggen, who had then but forty Shillings a Week, were now rais'd each of them to four Pounds, and others in proportion: As for myself, I was then too infignificant to be taken into their Councils, and confequently stood among those of little Importance, like Cattle in a Market, to be fold to the first Bidder. But the Patentees feeming a the greatest Distress for Actors, condescended to purchase me. Thus, without any farther Merit, that that of being a scarce Commodity, I was advanc'd to thirty thirty Shillings a Week: Yet our Company was to far from being full, that our Commanders were forc'd to beat up for Voluntiers, in several distant Counties; it was this Occasion that first brought Johnson and Bullock to the Service of the Theatre-Royal.

Ph

Ac-

nem-

fleat,

ctor.

ifing

nded

mers,

l ac-

feve-

their

d the

ength

or fet.

effec-

of the

inion,

p the e like

truft

Queen

ion of

terim.

folli-

, that

, were

as the

and

cafion

IT OWN

at they

d then

ach of

n: As

cen ing those

to be

ning in

o pur-

nc'd n

Forces being thus rais'd, and the War declared on both Sides; Betterton, and his Chiefs had the Honour of an Audience of the King, who confider'd them as the only Subjects, whom he had not yet deliver'd from arbitrary Power; and graciously dismised them, with an Affurance of Relief, and Support-Accordingly felect Number of them were impower'd by his Royal Licence, to act in a separate Theatre, for themselves. This great point being obtain'd, many People of Quality came into a voluntary Subscription of twenty, and fome of forty Guineas a-piece, for the erecting Theatre within the Walls of the Tennis-Court, in Lincolns-Inn-Fields. But as it requir'd Time to fit it pp, it gave the Patentees more Leisure to muster their forces, who notwithstanding were not able to take the Field till the Eafter-Monday in April following. Their first Attempt was a reviv'd Play, call'd Abdelazar, or the Moor's Revenge, poorly written, by Mrs. Behn. The House was very full, but whether it was the Play or the Actors, that were not approv'd, the next Day' Audience funk to nothing. However, we were affur'd, that let the Audiences be never fo low, our Maters would make good all Deficiences, and so indeed hey did, 'till towards the End of the Season, when Dues to Balance came too thick upon 'em. But that I may go gradually on with my own Fortune, I must ake this Occasion to let you know, by the following Circumstance, how very low my Capacity, as an Acor, was then rated: It was thought necessary, at our pening, that the Town shou'd be address'd in a new rologue; but to our great Diffress, among several, hat were offer'd, not one was judg'd fit to be spoken. his I thought a favourable Occasion, to do myself ome remarkable Service, If I should have the good ortune, to produce one that might be accepted. The ext (memorable) Day my Muse brought forth her first La

The Life of Mr. Cotter Crasse, St. The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c.

Fruit that was ever made publick; how good, or had imports not; my Prologue was accepted, and refolv'd on to be spoken. This point being gain'd, I began to stand upon Terms, you will fay, not unreasonable; which were, that if I might speak it myself, I would expect no farther Reward for my Labour ; This was judg'd as bad as having no Prologue at all I You may imagine how hard I thought it, that they durk not trust my poor poetical Brat, to my own Care, But fince I found it was to be given into other Hands, I infifted that two Guineas should be the price of my parting with it; which with a Sigh I receiv'd, and Powell spoke the Prologue: But every line, that was applauded, went forely to my Heart, when I reflected that the same Praise might have been given to my own speaking it; not could the Success of the Author compensate the Distress of the Actor. However, in the End, it ferv'd, in some fort, to mend our People's 0pinion of me; and whatever the Criticks might think of it, one of the Patentees (who, it is true, knew no difference between Dryden and D'urfey) faid, upon the Success of it, that insooth! I was an ingenious young Man. This fober Compliment (though I could have no Reason to be vain upon it) I thought was a fair Promise to my being in favour. But to matters of more Moment; now let us reconnoitre the Enemy.

After we had stolen some few Days March upon them, the Forces of Betterton came up with us in terrible Order: In about three Weeks following, the new Theatre was open'd against us, with a veteran Company, and a new Train of Artillery; or in plainer English, the old Actors, in Lincolns-Inn Fields began, with a new Comedy of Mr. Congreve's, call'd Love for Love; which ran on with fuch extraordinary Success, that they had seldom occasion to act any other Play, 'till the End of the Season. This valuable Play had a narrow Escape, from falling into the Hands of the Patentees; for before the Division of the Company, it had been read, and accepted of at the Theatre-Royal: But while the Articles of Agreement for it were preparing, the Rupture, in the Theatrical wei

In

Suj

the mat the !

ratio

I ha

Was I

Mrs. tilio;

reft ;

their

have fons fo

equal

than h

excelle

T

The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c. 1

State, was fo far advanc'd, that the Author took Time to pause, before he fign'd them; when finding that all Hopes of Accommodation were impracticable, he thought it adviseable, to let it take its Fortune, with those Actors for whom he had first intended the Parts.

0 ğ

ie.

ir

of

MO

in

he

an

in

las

l'd

her

lay

of

m-tre-

r it

ical

Mr. Congreve was then in such high Reputation. as an Author, that belides his Profits from this Play. they offer'd him a whole Share with them, which he accepted; in Confideration of which he oblig'd himself, if his Health permitted, to give them one new Play every Year. Dryden, in King Charles's Time, had the same Share, with the King's Company; but he bound himself to give them two Plays every Season. This you may imagine he could not hold long, and I am apt to think, he might have ferv'd them better, with one in a Year, not fo hastily written. Mr. Congreve, whatever Impediment he met with, was three Years before, in pursuance to his Agreement, he produc'd the Mourning Bride; and, if I mistake not, the Interval had been much the fame, when he gave them the Way of the World. But it came out the stronger, for the time it cost him, and to their better Support, when they forely wanted it: For though they went on with Success for a Year or two, and even when their Affairs were declining, stood in much higher Estimation of the Publick, than their Opponents; yet, in the End, both Sides were great Sufferers by their Separation; the natural Consequence of two Houses, which I have already mention'd in a former Chapter.

The first Error this new Colony of Actors fell into, was their inconsiderately parting with Williams, and Mrs. Monfort, upon a too nice (not to say severe) punctilio; in not allowing them to be equal Sharers with the rest; which before they had acted one Play, occasioned their Return to the Service of the Patentees. As I have call'd this an Error, I ought to give my Reasons for it. Though the Industry of Williams was not equal to his Capacity; for he lov'd his Bottle better than his Business; and though Mrs. Monfort was only excellent in Comedy, yet their Merit was too great,

almo

116 The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c.

almost on any Scruples, to be added to the Enemy, and, at worst, they were certainly much more above those they would have rank'd them with, than they could possibly be under those, they were not admitted to be equal to. Of this Fact there is a poetical Record in the Prologue to Love for Love, where the Author is speaking of the, then, happy State of the Stage, observes, that if, in Paradise, when two only were then, they both fell; the Surprize was less, if from so merous a Body as theirs, there had been any Deserter.

Abate the Wonder, and the Fault forgive, If, in our larger Family, we grieve One falling Adam, and one tempted Eve.

These lines alluded to the Revolt of the Persons above mention'd.

g ha

at

co

or

an hic

le ere

on

As

here

uch

t be dion

2 8

was

had

s (fo

miel

the

Day

tice

for

Notwithstanding the Acquisition of these two Actors, who were of more Importance, than any of these to whose Assistance they came, the Assairs of the Patertees were still in a very creeping Condition; they were now too late, convinc'd of their Error, in having provok'd their People to this Civil War, of the Theatre! quite chang'd, and dismal, now, was the prospect before them! their Houses thin, and the Town crouded into a new one! Actors at double selaries, and not half the usual Audiences, to pay them and all this brought upon them, by those, whom the sull Security had contemn'd, and who were now in a fair Way of making their Fortunes, upon the ruin'd Interest of their Oppressors.

Here, tho' at this time, my Fortune, depended on the Success of the Patentees, I cannot help, in regard to Truth, remembring the rude, and riotous Havot we made of all the late dramatic Honours of the Theatre! all became at once the Spoil of Ignorance and Self-conceit! Shakespear was defac'd, and torture in every signal Character—Hamlet, and Othello, let in one Hour all their good Sense, their Dignity, and Fame. Brutus and Cassius became noisy Blusteren ith bold unmeaning Eyes, mistaken Sentiments, and argid Elocution ! Nothing, fure, could more painfulregret a judicious Spectator, than to fee, at our first etting out, with what rude Confidence, those Habits, hich Actors of real Merit had left behind them, ere worn by giddy Pretenders that fo vulgarly difrac'd them! Not young Lawyers in hir'd Robes, nd Plumes, at a Masquerade could be less, what ey would feem, or more aukwardly personate the haracters they belong'd to. If, in all these Acts of anton waste, these Insults upon injur'd Nature, you herve, I have not yet charg'd one of them upon my If; it is not from an imaginary Vanity that I could we avoided them; but that I was rather fafe, by beg too low, at that time, to be admitted even to my hance of falling into the fame eminent Errors: So at as none of those great Parts ever fell to my Share, could not be accountable for the Execution of them: or indeed could I get one good Part of any kind, 'till any Months after; unless it were of that fort, hich no body else car'd for, or would venture to exle themselves in. The first unintended Favour. erefore, of a Part of any Value, Necessity threw on me on the following Occasion.

0

de

中年四日

the

the

St.

em

hei

fair

nte

do

gard

VOCE

the

ance

turd

, los

, and

eren

With

As it has been always judg'd their natural Interest, here there are two Theatres, to do one another as ach Mischief as they can; you may imagine it could t be long, before this hostile Policy shew'd itself, in tion. It happened, upon our having Information a Saturday Morning, that the Tuesday after Hamwas intended to be acted at the other House, where had not yet been feen; our merry managing Acs (for they were now in a manner left to govern mselves) resolved, at any rate, to steal a March upthe Enemy, and take possession of the same Play Day before them : Accordingly, Hamlet was given that Night, to be acted with us on Monday. The tice of this sudden Enterprize, soon reach'd the or House, who, in my Opinion, too much regarded for they shorten'd their first Orders, and resolv'd

that

that Hamlet should to Hamlet be oppos'd, on the same Day; whereas, had they given notice in their Bills. that the same Play would have been acted by them the Day after, the Town would have been in no doubt which House they should have referv'd themselves for ours must certainly have been empty, and theirs, with more Henour, have been crowded: Experience, many Years after, in like Cases, has convinc'd me, that the would have been the more laudable Conduct. But be that as it may; when, in their Monday's Bills, it was feen that Hamlet was up against us, our Consternation was terrible, to find that fo hopeful a project was frastrated. In this Distress, Powell, who was our commanding Officer, and whose enterprizing Head wanted nothing but Skill to carry him thro' the most desperate Attempts; for, like others of his Cast, he had murder'd many a Hero, only to get into his Cloaths. This Powell, I fay, immediately call'd a Council of War; where the Question was, whether he should fairly face the Enemy, or make a Retreat, to some other Play of more probable Safety? It was foon refolv'd that in act Hamlet against Hamlet, would be certainly throwing away the Play, and difgracing themselves to little or no Audience; to conclude, Powell who was vain enough to envy Betterton, as his Rival, propos'd to change Plays with them, and that, as they had given out the Old Batchelor, and had chang'd it for Hamlet, against us; we should give up our Hamlet, and tun the Old Batchelor upon them. This Motion was ! greed to, Nemine contradicente; but upon Enquiry, & was found, that there were not two Persons among them, who had ever acted in that Play: but that Objection it feems, (though all the Parts were to be study'd in fix Hours) was soon got over ; Powell had an Equivalent, in petto, that would balance any Deficient cy on that fcore; which was, that he would play the Old Batchelor himself, and mimick Betterton, through out the whole Part. This happy Thought was ap prov'd with Delight, and Applause, as whatever can be suppos'd to ridicule Merit, generally gives Joy to those 10

t

if

nif

tec

our

Pe

y l

was

ld 1

kin

ent

est :

bok

well

Bet

come

derec

fet o

the !

ev'n

Par

velve use of them

The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c. 119 hat want it: Accordingly, the Bills were chang'd, and at the Bottom inferted,

The Part of the Old Batchelor, to be perform'd in Imitation of the Original.

rinted Books of the Play were fent for in hafte, and yer Actor had one, to pick out of it the Part he had nofen: Thus, while they were each of them chewing e Morfel, they had most mind to, some one happeng to cast his Eye over the Dramatis Persona, found at the main Matter was still forgot, that no body had t been thought of for the Part of Alderman Fondleife. Here we were all a-ground agen! nor was it be conceived, who could make the least tolerable if with it. This Character had been fo admirably ted by Dogget, that though it is only feen in the ourth Act, it may be no Dispraise to the Play, to y, it probably ow'd the greatest Part of its Success to Performance. But as the Case was now desperate. y Resource was better than none. Somebody must allow the bitter Pill, or the Play must die. At last was recollected, that I had been heard to fay, in my ld way of talking, what a vast Mind I had to play kin, by which Name the Character was more freently call'd. Notwithstanding they were thus diest about the Disposal of this Part, most of 'em ook their Heads, at my being mention'd for it; yet well, who was refolv'd, at all Hazards, to fall up-Betterton, and having no concern for what might come of any one, that serv'd his Ends or Purpose, dered me to be fent for; and, as he naturally lov'd fet other People wrong, honestly faid, before I came, the Fool has a mind to blow himself up at once, let ev'n give bim a clear Stage for it. Accordingly, Part was put into my Hands, between Eleven and velve that Morning, which I durft not refuse, bele others were as much straitened in time, for Study, my felf. But I had this casual Advantage of most them; that having fo constantly observ'd Dogger's formance, I wanted but little Trouble, to make

. . .

œ of

to to en

leh

ITR

0

),

e

e

fe

rej

A

onc

ty

; e 1

e I

nit his lin

wi nd,

he ker

; 1

thi

et w Na

my fanc

the

ular

teve

ter

e, t

me perfect in the Words; fo that when it came w my turn to rehearse, while others read their Para from their Books, I had put mine in my Pocket, and went through the first Scene without it; and though! was more abash'd to rehearse so remarkable a part be fore the Actors (which is natural to most young People than to act before an Audience, yet some of the be ter-natur'd encourag'd me so far as to fay, they did me think I should make an ill Figure in it: To conclude the Curiofity to fee Betterton mimick'd, drew us a proty good Audience, and Powell (as far as Applause in proof of it) was allow'd to have burlefqu'd him ven well. As I have question'd the certain Value of Ap plause, I hope I may venture, with less Vanity, to far, how particular a Share I had of it, in the same Play At my first Appearance, one might have imagin'd, the various Murmurs of the Audience, that they were in doubt whether Dogget himself were not return'd, a that they could not conceive what strange Face it could be, that so nearly resembled him; for I had laid the Tint of Forty Years, more than my real Age, upon my Features, and, to the most minute placing of Hair, was dress'd exactly like him: When I spoke the surprize was still greater, as if I had not only borrow'd his Cloaths, but his Voice too. But the that was the least difficult part of him, to be imitated they feem'd to allow, I had so much of him, in every other Requisite, that my Applause was, perhaps, mon than proportionable: For, whether I had done if much, where so little was expected, or that the Ge nerofity of my Hearers were more than usually zealou, upon fo unexpected an Occasion, or from what other Motive such favour might be pour'd upon me, I can not fay; but, in plain and honest Truth, upon my going off from the first Scene, a much better Actor might have been proud of the Applause, that follows me; after one loud Plaudit was ended, and funk in to a general Whisper, that seem'd still to continue the private Approbation, it reviv'd to a fecond, and a gain to a third, still louder than the former. If all this, I add, that Dogget himself was in the it, at the fame Time, it would be too rank Affectaon, if I should not confess, that, to see him there a Vitness of my Reception, was, to me, as consummate Triumph, as the Heart of Vanity could be indulg'd ith. But whatever Vanity I might fet upon my felf. om this unexpected success, I found that was no Rule other People's Judgment of me. There were few no Parts, of the fame kind, to be had; nor could ey conceive from what I had done in this, what oer fort of Characters I could be fit for. If I follici. d for any thing of a different Nature, I was answer'd. hat was not in my Way. And what was in my Way. feems, was not, as yet refolv'd upon. And though reply'd, That I thought any Thing, naturally writ-, ought to be in every one's Way that pretended to be Actor; this was look'd upon as a vain, impracticable nceit of my own. Yet it is a Conceit, that, in ty Years farther Experience, I have not yet given ; I still think, that a Painter, who can draw but e fort of Object, or an Actor that shines, but in e Light, can neither of them boaft of that ample nius, which is necessary to form a thorough Master his Art: For tho' Genius may have a particular lination, yet a good History-Painter, or a good Acwill, without being at a loss, give you, upon Dend, a proper Likeness of whatever Nature produces. he cannot do this, he is only an Actor, as the Shoeker was allow'd a limited Judge of Apelles's Paint-; but not beyond his Last. Now, tho' to do any thing well, may have more Merit, than we often et with; and may be enough, to procure a Man Name of a good Actor, from the Publick; yet, my Opinion, it is but still the Name, without the fance. If his Talent is in such narrow Bounds, he dares not step out of them, to look upon the ularities of Mankind, and cannot catch them, in their tever Form they present themselves; if he is not fter of the Quicquid agunt bomines, &c. in any nd a e, that Human Nature is fit to be seen in; if If annot change himself into several distinct Persons, ated

very

mon ie fo

Ge

alous,

other

cann my

Actor

llow'd

k in

122 The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c.

fo as to vary his whole Tone of Voice, his Motion his Look, and Gesture, whether in high, or lower Life, and, at the same time, keep close to those Vari ations, without leaving the Character they fingly be long to; if his best skill falls short of this Capacity, what pretence have we to call him a compleat Mafer of his Art? And tho' I do not infift, that he ough always to shew himself in those various Lights, ye, before we compliment him with that Title, he ough at least, by some few Proofs, to let us fee, that he ha them all in his power. If I am asked, who, ever arriv'd at this imaginary Excellence, I confess the in stances are very few; but I will venture to name Mon fort, as one of them, whose theatrical Character! have given, in my last Chapter: For, in his Youd he had acted Low Humour, with great success, eva down to Tallboy in the Jovial Crew; and when k was in great Efteem, as a Tragedian, he was, in 0 medy, the most complete Gentleman that I ever in upon the Stage. Let me add too, that Betterton, i his declining Age, was as eminent, in Sir John Falled as in the Vigour of it, in his Othello.

0

ati

y ay

hou

hir

hor

er

fs.

e C

ge

r, a

Au

ctor.

roko

him

ely r rding

ve I

ough

ion.

oved

as ;

While I thus measure the Value of an Actor, b the Variety of shapes he is able to throw himself i to, you may naturally suspect, that I am all the while leading my own Theatrical Character in your Favour: Why, really, to speak as an home Man, I cannot wholly deny it: But in this, I ha endeavour to be no farther partial to my felf, the known Facts will make me; from the good, or be Evidence of which, your better Judgment will a demn, or acquit me. And to shew you, that I w conceal no Truth that is against me, I frankly out that had I been always left to my own choice of Ch racters, I am doubtful whether I might ever have ferv'd an equal share of that Estimation, which Publick feem'd to have held me in: Nor am I that it was not Vanity in me, often to have suspe ted, that I was kept out of the Parts I had m mind to, by the Jealoufy or Prejudice of my Cotemp TUM

aries; some Instances of which, I could give you, vere they not too slight, to be remember'd: In the nean time, be pleas'd to observe, how slowly, in my younger Days, my Good-fortune came for-

e

五世五四世二十二

11 ud,

Yes

地の気

i, i

r, 15 in in in hone

that the

1 con

I wi

y own

ve de

ich th I for

fulper

d me

temp

rain

My early Success in the Old Batchelor, of which I ave given so full an Account, having open'd no farher way to my Advancement, was enough, perhaps, have made a young Fellow of more Modesty depair; but being of a Temper not eafily dishearten'd, refolv'd to leave nothing unattempted, that might flew ne, in some new Rank of Distinction. Having then no her Resource, I was at last reduc'd to write a Character m my felf; but as that was not finish'd till about a ear after, I could not, in the Interim, procure any ne Part, that gave me the least Inclination to act it; nd consequently, such as I got, I perform'd with a oportionable Negligence. But this Misfortune, if it ere one, you are not to wonder at; for the fame ate attended me more or less, to the last Days of y remaining on the Stage. What defect in me, this ay have been owing to, I have not yet had Sense lough to find out, but I foon found out as good a hing, which was, never to be mortified at it : hough I am afraid this feeming Philosophy was raer owing to my Inclination to Pleasure, than Busis. But to my Point. The next Year I produc'd e Comedy of Love's last Shift; yet the Difficulty getting it to the Stage, was not eafily furmounted r, at that time, as little was expected from me, as Author, as had been from my Pretentions to be an ctor. However, Mr. Southern, the Author of Oproko, having had the Patience to hear me read it him, happened to like it so well, that he immediely recommended it to the Patentees, and it was acrdingly acted in January, 1695. In this Play, I we myself the Part of Sir Novelty, which was ought a good Portrait of the Foppery then in Faion. Here too, Mr. Southern, though he had apoved my Play, came into the common Diffidence of , as an Actor: For, when on the first Day of it, I M z was standing, my felf, to prompt the Prologue, he took me by the Hand, and faid, Young Man! I pronound thy Play a good one; I will answer for its Succession if thou dost not spoil it by thy own Action. Though this might be a fair Salvo, for his favourable Judg. ment of the Play; yet if it were his real Opinion of me, as an Actor, I had the good Fortune to decein him: I succeeded so well in both, that People seem! at a Loss, which they should give the Preference a But (now let me shew a little more Vanity, and m Apology for it, shall come after) the Complimen which my Lord Dorfet (then Lord Chamberlain) make me upon it, is, I own, what I had rather not suppress viz. That it was the best, First Play, that any he thor in his Memory, had produc'd; and that for joung Fellow, to show himself such an Actor, and su a Writer, in one Day, was something extraordinan But as this noble Lord has been celebrated for h Good-nature, I am contented, that as much of the Compliment should be suppos'd to exceed my Defen as may be imagin'd to have been heighten'd, by h generous Inclination to encourage a young Beginne If this Excuse cannot soften the Vanity of telling Truth fo much, in my own Favour, I must lie, the Mercy of my Reader. But there was a still high Compliment pass'd upon me, which I may publi without Vanity, because it was not a design'd one, a apparently came from my Enemies, viz. That, their certain Knowledge it was not my own: The Report is taken notice of in my Dedication to Play. If they spoke Truth, if they knew what ther Person it really belong'd to, I will, at least low them true to their Trust; for above forty Yes have fince past, and they have not yet reveal'd the cret.

bi

d

ta A

e

e

ha

n

T

ith

d

in)

ife

A

t a

ing

wh at f

n h

an

hap a ve

6, 1

eh ]

W

The new Light, in which the Character of Sir I welty had shewn me, one might have thought, we enough, to have dissipated the Doubts, of what might now, be possibly good for. But to whaten Chance, my Ill-fortune was due; whether I had so but little Merit, or that the Managers, if I had as vere not competent Judges of it; or whether I was ot generally elbow'd, by other Actors (which I am off inclin'd to think the true Cause) when any fresh arts were to be dispos'd of, not one Part of any conquence was I preferr'd to, 'till the Year following : hen, indeed, from Sir John Vanbrugh's favourable pinion of me, I began, with others, to have a betr of my felf: For he not only did me Honour, as Author, by writing his Relapse, as a Sequel, or Seand Part, to Love's last Shift; but as an Actor too by eferring me to the chief Character in his own Play; which from Sir Novelty) he had ennobled by the yle of Baron of Foppington. This Play (the Relapse) om its new and easy Turn of Wit, had great Success, d gave me, as a Comedian, a fecond Flight of Retation along with it.

As the Matter I write must be very slat, or imperent, to those who have no Taste, or Concern for e Stage; and may to those, who delight in it too, equally tedious, when I talk of no body but my self; hall endeavour to relieve your Patience, by a Word two more of this Gentleman, so far as he lent his n to the Support of the Theatre.

in the so of ive

b'n

to, my nent nade refs,

As-

fud nary

FE

fert.

nna

ling

lie, i

e, an

nat, I

T

to t hat

eaft :

v Yes

the &

Sir I

it, we

what

hater

had fi

had a

Though the Relapse was the first Play this agreeable thor produc'd, yet it was not, it seems, the first he d written; for he had at that Time, by him, (more in) all the Scenes, that were acted of the Provok'd ise; but being then doubtful, whether he should ever if them to the Stage, he thought no more of it: t after the Success of the Relapse, he was more ingly importun'd, than able, to refuse it to the Public. Why the last written Play was first acted, and what Reason they were given to different Stages, at follows, will explain.

In his first Step, into publick Life, when he was an Ensign, and had a Heart above his Income, happen'd somewhere, at his Winter Quarters, upa very slender Acquaintance with Sir Thomas Skipb, to receive a particular Obligation from him, when he had not forgot at the Time I am speaking When Sir Thomas's Interest, in the Theatrical Patent (for he had a large fhare in it, though he little concern'd himself in the Conduct of it) was rising but very flowly, he thought, that to give it a Lift, by new Comedy, if it succeeded, might be the handloneft return he could make to those his former Favour and having observ'd that in Love's last Shift, most of the Actors had acquitted themselves beyond what wa expected of them; he took a fudden Hint from white he lik'd, in that Play, and in less than three Month in the beginning of April following, brought us the Relapse finish'd; but, the Season being then took advanc'd, not acted 'till the succeeding Winter. Un on the Success of the Relapse, the late Lord Hall lifax, who was a great favourer of Bettern Company, having formerly, by way of Family-A musement, heard the Provok'd Wife read to him in its loofer Sheets, engag'd Sir John Vanbrugh revise it, and give it to the Theatre in Lincoln's-la Fields. This was a Request not to be refus'd to eminent a Patron of the Muses as the Lord Hallifa who was equally a Friend and Admirer of Sir Ja himself. Nor was Sir Thomas Skipwith, in the la disobliged by a reasonable Compliance: After white Sir John was again at Liberty, to repeat his Con lities to his Friend, Sir Thomas; and about the far time, or not long after, gave us the Comedy of E for his Inclination always led him to serve Sir Thom Befides, our Company, about this time, began to look'd upon, in another Light; the late Contem we had lain under, was now wearing off, and for the Success of two or three new Plays, our Actor, being Originals in a few good Parts, where they h not the Difadvantage of Comparison against the fometimes found new Favour, in those old Plays, who others had exceeded them.

Of this Good fortune, perhaps, I had more the my Share, from the two very different, chief Charters, I had succeeded in; for I was equally approxim Æ fop as the Lord Foppington, allowing the Difference, to be no less, than as Wisdom, in a Perhaps

deform

h

he

fi

na

Pro

hir

n a

Act

fSi

har

onfi

Vit

hoft

bmn

onfei ive

lay i

ier i

ry, t

ere,

ey n eigh'

it no

fe an arm,

deform'd, may be less entertaining to the general Tafte. than Folly and Foppery, finely dreft: For the Character that delivers Precepts of Wisdom, is, in some fort, severe upon the Auditor, by shewing him one wifer than himself. But when Folly is his Object, he applauds himfelf, for being wifer than the Coxcomb he laughs at: And who is not more pleas'd with an Occaion to commend, than accuse himself?

tori A-A-

bo

la

to f

John lead

Civi

E for

tob

temp fro

ors, y h

the

whe

- 20

e th

Chara

pprov e Di

Per

form

Though, to write much, in a little time, is no Excuse for writing ill; yet Sir John Vanbrugh's Pen, is not to be a little admir'd, for its Spirit, Ease, and Readiness, in producing Plays so fast, upon the Neck of one another; for, notwithstanding this quick Difpatch, there is a clear and lively fimplicity in his Wit, hat neither wants the Ornament of Learning, nor has he least smell of the Lamp in it. As the Face of fine Woman, with only her Locks loofe about her, nay be then in its greatest Beauty; such were his Productions, only adorn'd by Nature. There is fomehing fo catching to the Ear, so easy to the Memory, n all he writ, that it has been observ'd, by all the Actors of my Time, that the Style of no Author vhatsoever, gave their Memory less Trouble, than that f Sir John Vanbrugh; which I myfelf, who have been harg'd with feveral of his strongest Characters, can onfirm by a pleasing Experience. And indeed his Vit and Humour was so little laboured, that his oft entertaining Scenes feem'd to be no more than his ommon Conversation committed to Paper. Here, I onfess my Judgment at a Loss, whether, in this, I we him more or less than his due Praise? For ay it not be more laudable, to raise an Estate (wheer in Wealth or Fame) by pains, and honest Indury, than to be born to it? Yet, if his Scenes really ere, as to me they always feem'd, delightful, are ey not, thus, expeditiously written, the more furising? Let the Wit and Merit of them, then, be eigh'd by wiser Criticks, than I pretend to be: at no wonder, while his Conceptions were fo full of fe and Humour, his Muse should be sometimes too arm, to wait the flow pace of Judgment, or to endure the Drudgery, of forming a regular Fable to them: Yet we see the Relapse, however impersed in the Conduct, by the mere Force of its agreeable Wit, ran away with the Hearts of its Hearers; while Lowin last Shift, which (as Mr. Congreve justly said of it) had only in it, a great many things, that were like Wit, that in Reality were not Wit. And what is still less pardonable (as I say of it myself) has a great deal of Puerility, and frothy Stage Language in it, yet by the mere moral Delight received from its Fable, it has been, with the other, in a continued and equal Possifion of the Stage, for more than forty Years.

728 The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c.

re

h

P

en

lly

re

fid

ual

ve

y

uch

s tl

may ve i

ischi

nnot

e in

man

ind ]

nts o

the 7

n, m y, or uifite

n the

As I have already promis'd you, to refer your Judg. ment of me, as an Actor, rather to known Facts, than my own Opinion (which, I could not be fure, would keep clear of felf-partiality) I must a little farther risque my being tedious, to be as good as my Word I have elsewhere allow'd, that my want of a strong and full Voice, foon cut short my Hopes of making any valuable Figure in Tragedy; and I have been many Years fince, convinc'd, that whatever Opinion I might have of my own Judgment or Capacity to amend the palpable Errors, that I faw our Tragedians, most is favour, commit; yet the Auditors, who would have been fenfible of any fuch Amendments (could I have made them) were fo very few, that my best Enda vours would have been but an unavailing Labour, or what is yet worse, might have appeared both to our Actors, and to many Auditors, the vain Mistake of my own felf-conceit: For fo strong, fo very near is dispensible, is that one Article of Voice, in the form ing a good Tragedian, that an Actor may want an other Qualification whatfoever, and yet have a better Chance for Applause, than he will ever have, with the Skill in the World, if his Voice is not equal it. Mistake me not; I say, for Applause onlybut Applause does not always stay for, nor alway follow intrinsick Merit; Applause will frequently open, like a young Hound, upon a wrong Scent and the Majority of Auditors, you know, are gen -me to to destroy to see will be a lay of .

Breite

rally compos'd of Babblers, that are profuse of their Voices, before there is any thing on foot, that calls for them: Not but, I grant, to lead, or mislead the Many, will always stand in some Rank of a necessary Merit; yet when I say a good Tragedian, I mean one, in Opinion of whose real Merit, the best Judges vould agree.

an did her ord

gao

ing

any ight

ft in

have

have

idez-

, ot,

o out

ce d

IT II

form

it am

better

ith all jual to

uenti

Scent

gene

Tall

Having fo far given up my Pretenfions to the Bufin, I ought now to account for my having been, otwithstanding, so often seen, in some particular Chaafters in Tragedy, as Jago, Wolfey, Syphax, Richard he Third, &c. If in any of this kind I have fuceeded, perhaps it has been a Merit dearly purchas'd; or, from the delight I feem'd to take in my performing em, half my Auditors have been persuaded, that a reat Share of the Wickedness of them, must have een in my own Nature : If this is true, as true I fear had almost said hope) it is, I look upon it rather as Praise, than Censure of my Performance. Aversion ere is an involuntary Commendation, where we are ly hated, for being like the thing, we ought to be ke; a fort of Praise however which sew Actors fides my felf could endure: Had it been equal to the ual Praise given to Virtue, my Cotemporaries would ve thought themselves injured, if I had pretended to y Share of it: So that you fee, it has been, as uch the Dislike others had to them, as Choice, that s thrown me fometimes into these Characters. But may be farther observ'd, that in the Characters I ve nam'd, where there is so much close Meditated ischief, Deceit, Pride, Insolence, or Cruelty, they mot have the least Cast, or Profer of the Amie in them; consequently, there can be no great mand for that harmonious Sound, or pleafing, nd Melody of Voice, which in the fofter Sentints of Love, the Wailings of diftressful Virtue, or the Throws and Swellings of Honour and Ambin, may be needful to recommend them to our y, or Admiration: So that again my want of that uisite Voice might less disqualify me for the vicious, n the virtuous Character. This too may have been a more favourable Reason for my having been chosen for them - a yet farther Confideration, that inclind me to them, was that they are generally better written, thicker fown, with fenfible Reflections, and come by so much nearer to common Life, and Nature, than Characters of Admiration, as Vice is more the Prac. tice of Mankind than Virtue: Nor could I fometime help smiling, that those dainty Actors, that were too fqueamish to swallow them ! as if they were one lot the better Men, for acting a good Man well, or another Man the worse, for doing equal Justice to a bad one! 'Tis not, fure, what we act, but bow we act what is allotted us, that speaks our intrinsick Value as in real Life, the wife Man, or the Fool, be he Prince, or Peafant, will, in either State, be equally the Fool, or the wife Man-but alass! in personated Life, this is no Rule to the Vulgar! they are apt to think all before them real, and rate the Actor according to his borrowed Vice, or Virtue.

If then I had always too careless a Concern for falk or vulgar Applause, I ought not to complain, If I have had less of it, than others of my Time, or not les of it, than I defir'd: Yet I will venture to fay, that from the common, weak Appetite of false Applaul many Actors have run into more Errors, and Ablur dities, than their greatest Ignorance could otherwise have committed: If this Charge is true, it will be chiefly upon the better Judgment of the Spectators

be

ca

Su

ca

fro

vided

de go

the '

faft

ing 1

ar o

rfe g

my o

reform it.

But not to make too great a Merit of my avoiding this common Road to Applause, perhaps I was vaint nough to think, I had more ways, than one, to con at it. That in the variety of Characters I acted, Chances to win it were the stronger on my Side-That, if the Multitude were not in a Roar, to fee I in Cardinal Wolfey, I could be fure of them in Alde man Fondle-wife. If they hated me in Jago, in & Fopling they took me for a fine Gentleman; if the were filent at Syphax, no Italian Eunuch was me applauded than when I fung in Sir Courtly. If Morals of Æ fop were too grave for them, Juli challow was as simple, and as merry an old Rake as the visest of our young ones could wish me. And though the Terror and Detestation rais'd by King Richard, night be too severe a Delight for them, yet the more rentle and modern Vanities of a Poet Bays or the rell-bred Vices of a Lord Foppington, were not at all, nore than their merry Hearts, or nicer Morals could ear.

13

es

00

ot:

10-

ad

a,

e!

he 百三三 t to

ord-

falls lave les that

aufe

blu-

1 1

tor

ain e

d, t

eee m

Alde

in S f the

If t

Juffig

These sew Instances out of fifty more I could give ou, may serve to explain, what fort of Merit, I at soft pretended to; which was that I supply'd, with sariety what ever I might want of that particular kill, wherein others went before me. How this Vaety was executed (for by that only is its value to be seed) you who have so often been my Spectator, are se proper Judge: If you pronounce my Performance have been desective, I am condemn'd by my own Edence; if you acquit me, these Out-lines may serve r a Sketch of my Theatrical Character.

CHAP. VII.

be State of the Stage continued. The Occasion of Wilks's commencing Actor. His Success. The Facts relating to his Theatrical Talent. Actors more or less esteem'd from their private Characters.

HE Lincolns-Inn-Fields Company were, now in 1693, a Common-wealth, like that of Holland vided from the Tyranny of Spain: But the Similide goes very little farther; short was the Duration the Theatrical Power! for though Success pour'd in fast upon them, at their first Opening, that everying seem'd to support it self; yet Experience, in a ar or two, shew'd them, that they had never been rie govern'd, than when they govern'd themselves! my of them began to make their particular Interest

in tra

no

her

his

Roy

tric

time Lory

Fren

with ng, i

lipos

vith,

light

etter Opinio

hat h

trical urfuit

embe

any

fuch nces h

la's-In

was,

ly from

t like

overnn

ccess a

uration

ttry___

e old

erit th

y feem

the Pub

y be ke

never fo

more their Point, than that of the general; and though some Deference might be had to the Measures, and Advice of Betterton, several of them wanted to govern in their Turn; and were often out of Humour, that their Opinion was not equally regarded—But have we not feen the fame Infirmity in Senates? The Tragedians feem'd to think their Rank as much above the Comedians, as in the Characters they feverally acted; when they first were in their Finery, the latter were impatient, at the Expence; and look'd upon it, as rather laid out, upon the real, than the fictitious Person of the Act; nay, I have known, in our own Company, this ridiculous fort of Regret carry'd fo far, that the Tragedian has thought himself injur'd, when the Comedian pretended to wear a fine Coat! I remember Powell, upon furveying my first Dress, in the Relapse, was out of all temper, and reproach'd our Master in very rude Terms, that he had not so good a Suit to play Cafar Borgia in! tho' he knew, at the fame time, my Lord Foppington fill'd the House, when his bouncing Borgia would do little more than pay Fiddles, and Candles to it: And though a Character of Vanity, might be suppos'd more expensive in Dress, than possibly one of Ambition; yet the high Heart of this heroical Actor could not bear, that a Comedian should ever pretend to be as well dress'd as himself. Thus again on the contrary, when Betterton propos'd to fet off a Tragedy, the Comedians were fure to murmur at the Charge of it: And the late Reputation which Dogget had acquir'd, from acting his Ben, in Love for Love, made him a more declar'd Malecontent on fuch Occasions; he over-valued Comedy for its being nearer to Nature than Tragedy; which is allow'd to fay many fine things, that Nature never spoke, in the same Words; and supposing his Opinion were just, yet he should have consider'd, that the Publick had a Tafte, as well as himself; which, in Policy, he ought to have comply'd with. Dogget however could not, with Patience, look upon the costly Trains and Plumes of Tragedy, in which knowing ing himself to be useless, he thought were all a vain Extravagance: And when he found his Singularity could no longer oppose that Expence, he so obstinately adhered to his own Opinion, that he left the Society of his old Friends, and came over to us at the Theatre-Royal: And yet this Actor always fet up for a Thearical Patriot. This happen'd in the Winter following the first Division of the (only) Company. He came ime enough to the Theatre-Royal, to act the Part of Lory, in the Relapse, an arch Valet, quite after the French cast, pert, and familiar. But it suited so ill with Dogget's dry and closely-natural manner of actng, that upon the fecond Day he defir'd it might be lipos'd of to another; which the Author complying with, gave it to Penkethman; who though, in other lights, much his Inferior, yet this Part he feem'd etter to become. Dogget was fo immoveable in his a pinion of whatever he thought was right, or wrong, hat he could never be easy, under any kind of Thetrical Government; and was generally fo warm, in ursuit of his Interest, that he often out-ran it; I reember him three times, for some Years, unemploy'd any Theatre, from his not being able to bear, in ommon with others, the disagreeable Accidents, that fuch Societies are unavoidable. But whatever Prences he had form'd for this first deserting, from Linhis-Inn-Fields, I always thought his best Reason for was, that he look'd upon it as a finking Ship; not ly from the melancholy Abatement of their Profits, tlikewise from the Neglect, and Disorder in their overnment ! He plainly faw, that their extraordinary ccess at first, had made them too consident of its wation, and from thence had flacken'd their Intry—by which he observ'd, at the same time, old House, where there was scarce any other trit than Industry, began to flourish. And indeed y feem'd not enough to confider, that the Appetite the Publick, like that of a fine Gentleman, could y be kept warm, by Variety; that let their Merit never so high, yet the Taste of a Town was not al-

1

n

)-

)-

ways constant, nor infallible: That it was dangered to hold their Rivals in too much Contempt; for the found, that a young industrious Company were found a Match for the best Actors, when too securely negligent: And negligent they certainly were, and fondy fancy'd, that had each of their different Schemes bear follow'd, their Audiences would not so suddenly har fallen off.

h

er

at itt

ur

ear

)

2

H

deed

e fu

low.

ivile

s at acefi

ectin

ted, ors?

re fo

mditi

netim

ces of

after

the H

them

oney i

ge Do

re: A

ught v

fes of

But alas ! the Vanity of applauded Actors, who they are not crowded to, as they may have been makes them naturally impute the Change to any Caul rather than the true one, Satiety : They are might loth, to think a Town, once so fond of them, could ever be tired; and yet, at one time, or other, more a less, thin Houses have been the certain Fate of the most prosperous Actors, ever fince I remember the Stage! But against this Evil, the provident Patenta had found out a Relief, which the new House was not yet Masters of, wiz. Never to pay their People when the Money did not come in; nor then neither but in fuch Proportions as fuited their Convenience I my felf was one of the many, who for fix acting Weeks together, never receiv'd one Day's Pay; a for some Years after, seldom had above half our nom nal Salaries: But to the best of my Memory, the s nances of the other House held it not above one Seal more, before they were reduc'd to the fame expedia of making the like scanty Payments.

Such was the Distress, and Fortune of both the Companies, fince their Division from the Theatre-Ry al; either working at half Wages, or by alterna Successes, intercepting the Bread from one another Mouths; irreconcileable Enemies, yet without Hop of Relief, from a Victory on either fide; sometime both Parties reduc'd, and yet each supporting the Spirits, by seeing the other under the same Calmity.

During this State of the Stage, it was, that a lowest expedient was made use of, to ingratiate of Company, in the Publick Favour; Our Master, w ad some time practis'd the Law, and therefore lov'd a torm better than fair Weather (for it was his own onduct chiefly, that had brought the Patent into thefe langers) took nothing so much to Heart, as that Parality, wherewith he imagin'd the People of Quality ad preferr'd the Actors of the other House to those his own: To ballance this Misfortune, he was relv'd, at least, to be well with their Domesticks, and erefore cunningly open'd the upper Gallery to them atis: For before this time no Footman was ever aditted, or had prefum'd to come into it, till after the urth Act was ended: This additional Privilege (the eatest Plague that ever Play-house had to complain ) he conceiv'd would not only incline them to give a good Word, in the respective Families they beng'd to, but would naturally incite them, to come Hands aloft, in the Crack of our Applauses: And deed it so far succeeded, that it often thunder'd from e full Gallery above, while our thin Pit, and Boxes low, were in the utmost Serenity. This riotous ivilege so craftily given, and which from Custom, s at last ripen'd into Right, became the most difaceful Nusance, that ever depreciated the Theatre. ow often have the most polite Audiences, in the most efting Scenes of the best Plays, been disturb'd and inted, by the Noise and Clamour of these Savage Specors? From the same narrow way of thinking too, re so many ordinary People, and unlick'd Cubs of ndition, admitted behind our Scenes, for Money, and netimes without it: The Plagues, and Inconvenices of which Custom, we found so intolerable, when afterwards had the Stage in our Hands, that the Hazard of our Lives, we were forc'd to get rid them, and our only Expedient was, by refusing oney from all Persons, without distinction, at the ge Door; by this means we preferv'd to our felves Right and Liberty of chusing our own Company re: And by a strict Observance of this Order, we ught what had been before debas'd into all the Liles of a Lobby, into the Decencies of a Drawingom, her Roman her in the Cal

t d

e 0

N L

About the diffresful Time I was speaking of the Year 1696, Wilks, who now had been five Year in great Esteem on the Dublin Theatre, return'd that of Drury-Lane; in which last he had first set out and had continued to act fome small Parts, for or Winter only. The confiderable Figure which he lately made upon the Stage in London, makes me im gine that a particular Account of his first commencin Actor may not be unacceptable, to the Curious; I ha therefore, give it them, as I had it from his out Mouth.

In King James's Reign he had been some time en ploy'd in the Secretary's Office in Ireland (his nation Country) and remain'd in it, till after the Battled the Boyne, which completed the Revolution. Up that happy, and unexpected Deliverance, the People of Dublin, among the various Expressions of their lor had a Mind to have a Play; but the Actors being & pers'd, during the War, some private Persons agree in the best manner they were able, to give one, to the Publick, gratis, at the Theatre. The Play was Other lo, in which Wilks acted the Moor; and the Applai he receiv'd in it, warm'd him to so strong an Inclinate for the Stage, that he immediately preferr'd it to his other Views in Life: For he quitted his Poft, a with the first fair Occasion came over to try his For tune, in the (then only) Company of Actors in La don. The Person, who supply'd his Post, in Dubla he told me, rais'd to himself, from thence, a Fortu of fifty thousand Pounds. Here you have a mu stronger Instance of an extravagant Passion for the Stage, than that which I have elsewhere shewn my felf; I only quitted my Hopes of being prefer to the like Post, for it; but Wilks quitted his actu Rossession, for the imaginary Happiness, which t Life of an Actor presented to him. And, thou possibly, we might both have better'd our Fortus in a more honourable Station, yet whether better h tunes might have equally gratify'd our Vanity Advan universal Passion of Mankind) may admit of a Qu the in antha . tion.

U ú

bn at d

nc 661

w

ne

dy

7 5

mi

s in

ion

1001

a b

the

en i fron

ka. h th

Stag

brok

the

pon

on of

or tha

'd h te his

was

'd it n

and v

in D

Upon his being formerly receiv'd into the Theatreoyal (which was in the Winter after I had been iniated) his Station there was much upon the fame lass, with my own; our Parts were generally of an ual Infignificancy, not of confequence enough to give ther a preference : But Wilks being more impatient his low Condition, than I was, (and, indeed, the empany was then fo well flocked with good Actors, at there was very little Hope of getting forward) d hold of a more expeditious Way for his Adncement, and return'd again to Dublin, with Mr. bbury, the Patentee of that Theatre, to act in his w Company there; There went with him, at the ne Time, Mrs. Butler, whose Character I have aldy given, and Effcourt, who had not appear'd upon y Stage, and was yet only known as an excellent mick: Wilks having no Competitor in Dublin, s immediately preferr'd to whatever Parts his Incliion led him, and his early Reputation on that Stage, foon rais'd, in him, an Ambition to shew himself a better. And I have heard him fay (in Raillery the Vanity, which young Actors are liable to) that en the News of Monfort's Death came to Ireland, from that time thought his Fortune was made, and k a Resolution to return a second time to England, h the first Opportunity; but as his Engagements to Stage, where he was, were too strong to be suddenbroke from, he return'd not to the Theatre-Royal, the Year 1696.

or provide the ball of a second to be the ball of the nuc n

en

Au t

oug

Fo (t

Que

Upo

Jpon his first Arrival, Powell, who was now in possion of all the chief parts of Monfort, and the only or that stood in Wilks's Way; in seeming Civility, i'd him his choice of whatever he thought fit, to se his first Appearance in; tho', in reality, the Farwas intended to hurt him. But Wilks rightly i'd it more modest, to accept only of a Part of Power and which Monfort had never acted, that of Palarin Dryden's Marriage Alamode. Here too, he had Advantage of having the Ball play'd into his Hand, the inimitable Mrs. Monfort, who was then his sutha in the same Play: Whatever Fame Wilks

N 3

had had brought with him from Ireland, he as yet appear'd but a very raw Actor, to what he was afterwards allow'd to be : His Faults however, I shall rather leave to the Judgments of those, who then may remember him, than to take upon me the difagreeable Office of being particular upon them, farther than by faying, that in this Part of Palamede, he was short of Powell, and missed a good deal of the loose Humour of the Character, which the other more happily hit, But however, he was young, erect, of a pleasing Aspect, and, in the whole, gave the Town, and the Stage, sufficient Hopes of him. I ought to make some Allowances too, for the Restraint he must naturally have been under, from his first Appearance upon a new Stage. But from that he foon recover'd, and grew daily, more in Favour not only of the Town, but likewise of the Patentee, whom Powell, before Wills Arrival, had treated, in almost what manner he

2

fe

the

be:

let

ture

the the

the

prob that

it,

Scho

comn

But ind v

itude

ive ti

ne of

in a erfect,

ionabl

im, in

f mor

is Intr

em for f what resided,

pleas'd.

Upon this visible success of Wilks, the pretended Contempt, which Powell had held him in, began to four into an open Jealoufy; he now plainly faw, he was a formidable Rival, and (which more hurt him) faw too, that other People faw it; and therefore found it high Time, to oppose, and be troublesome to him. But Wilks happening to be as jealous of his Fame, as the other, you may imagine fuch clashing Candidates could not be long without a Rupture: In short, a Challenge, I very well remember, came from Powell, when he was hot headed; but the next Morning he was cool enough, to let it end, in favour of Wills. Yet however the Magnanimity, on either Part, might fubfide, the Animofity was as deep in the Heart, as ever, tho' it was not afterwards fo openly avow'd: For when Powell found that intimidating would not carry his Point; but that Wilks, when provok'd would really give Battle, he (Powell) grew fo out of Humour, that he cock'd his Hat, and in his Paffion walk'd off, to the Service of the Company, in Lincoln's Inn-Fields. But there, finding more Competitors, and that he made a worse Figure among them, than in the Company he came from, he staid but one Winter with them, before he returned to his old Quarters, in Drury-Lane; where, after these unsuccessful Pushes of his Ambition, he at last became a Martyr to Negligence, and quietly submitted to the Advantages, and Superiority, which (during his late Disertion) Wilks had more eafily got over him.

to

n)

nd

m.

dirt,

ell,

he

lks.

ght

as d:

not k'd

Out

fior

an

However trifling these Theatrical Anecdotes may feem, to a fensible Reader, yet, as the different Conduct of these rival Actors may be of use, to others of the same Profession, and from thence may contribute to the Pleasure of the Publick; let that be my Excuse, for pursuing them. I must, therefore, let it be known, that though, in Voice, and Ear, Nature had been more kind to Powell, yet he fo often loft the Value of them, by an unheedful Confidence, that the constant wakeful Care, and Decency, of Wilks, left the other far behind in the publick Esteem, and Approbation. Nor was his Memory less tenacious than that of Wilks; but Powell put too much Trust in t, and idly deferr'd the studying of his Parts, as school-boys do their Exercise, to the last Day; which commonly brings them out proportionably defective. But Wilks never lost an hour of precious Time, nd was, in all his Parts, perfect, to such an Exac. itude, that I question, if in forty Years he ever we times chang'd or misplac'd an Article, in any ne of them. To be Master of this uncommon Digence, is adding, to the Gift of Nature, all that in an Actor's Power; and this Duty of studying erfect, whatever Actor is remiss in, he will prolonably find, that Nature may have been kind to im, in vain; for though Powell had an Affurance, hat cover'd this Neglect much better than a Man f more Modesty might have done; yet with all is Intrepidity, very often the Diffidence, and Conem for what he was to fay, made him lose the Look what he was to be: While, therefore, Powell resided, his idle Example made this fault so common to others, that I cannot but confess, in the go neral Infection, I had my Share of it; nor was my too critical Excuse for it, a good one, viz. That scarce one Part in five, that fell to my Lot, was word the Labour. But to shew Respect to an Audience, i worth the best Actor's Labour, and his Bufiness confidered, he must be a very impudent one, that come before them, with a conscious Negligence of what he is about. But Wilks was never known, to make any of these venial Distinctions; nor however barren ha Part might be, could bear even the Self-Reproad of favouring his Memory: And I have been aftonial ed, to fee him swallow a Volume of Froth, and la fipidity, in a new Play, that we were fure could no live above three Days, tho' favour'd, and recommen ded to the Stage by fome good Person of Quality Upon fuch Occasions, in compassion to his fruited Toil, and Labour, I have sometimes cry'd out with Cato-Painful Præeminence! So insupportable, in my Sense, was the Task, when the bare Praise of m having been negligent, was fure to be the only Re ward of it. But so indefatigable was the Diligenced Wilks, that he feem'd to love it, as a good Mandon Virtue, for its own fake; of which the following la stance will give you an extraordinary Proof.

bi

bı

ti

ul

er

ar

iva

rts

ice

iou

the

put

ore

nfed Afte

tick

ring

fan t of

nora

onter

ess, i

as II

led

hoot

fe of

mplai

nuch l

it:

of th eft goo

to wri

as un

t, I fa

In some new Comedy, he happen'd to complaint a crabbed Speech in his Part, which, he said, gan him more trouble to study, than all the rest of it had done; upon which, he apply'd to the Author, either to soften or shorten it. The Author that he might make the Matter quite easy to him, fairly cut it a out. But when he got home from the Reheard Wilks thought it such an Indignity to his Memory that any thing should be thought too hard for it, the he actually made himself perfect in that Speech though he knew it was never to be made use of From this singular Act of Supererogation, you may judge, how indefatigable the Labour of his Memory must have been, when his Profit, and Honour, we more concern'd to make use of it.

But besides this indispensable Quality of Diligence, Vilks had the Advantage of a fober Character, in prite Life, which Powell not having the least Regard to. bour'd under the unhappy Disfavour, not to fay, ontempt of the Publick, to whom his licentious ourses were no Secret : Even when he did well, that tural Prejudice pursu'd him; neither the Hero, nor e Gentleman; the young Ammon, nor the Dorimant, uld conceal, from the conscious Spectator, the True orge Powell. And this fort of Disesteem or Favour, ery Actor will feel, and more or less, have his are of as he bas, or has not, a due Regard to his ivate Life and Reputation. Nay, even false Rerts shall affect him, and become the Cause, or Prece at least of undervaluing, or treating him injoufly. Let me give a known Instance of it, and, the same time, a Justification of my self, from an putation, that was laid upon me, not many Years, ore I quitted the Theatre, of which you will fee the nsequence.

After the vast Success of that new Species of Dratick Poetry, the Beggars Opera: The Year folfame Kind, upon a quite different Foundation, t of recommending Virtue and Innocence; which morantly thought, might not have a less Pretence Favour, than fetting Greatness and Authority in ontemptible, and the most vulgar Vice, and Wickess, in an amiable Light. But behold how fondly as mistaken! Love in a Riddle (for so my newgled Performance was call'd) was as vilely damn'd hooted at, as fo vain a Prefumption, in the idle se of Virtue could deserve. Yet this is not what mplain of; I will allow my Poetry, to have been such below the other, as Taste, or Criticism, can it: I will grant likewise, that the applauded Auof the Beggars Opera (whom I knew to be an of good natur'd Man, and who, when he had descento write more like one in the Cause of Virtue, had as unfortunate, as others of that Class;) I will t, I say, that in his Beggars Opera, he had more kilfully

mor Wel

1

d

e

ul

CE

F

to d I

e J

:

y, t tl

pre

ort

Con

of ned

erfi

C

s is wn i

, be

and

e, h lefs,

ad,

il! 1

at be tlem

ther

avou

ford

of def

skilfully gratify'd the publick Taste, than all the brightest Authors that ever writ before him; and I have fometimes thought, from the Modesty of his Moth Nos' bæc novimus effe nibil, that he gave them the Performance, as a Satyr upon the Depravity of the Judgment (as Ben. Johnson, of old, was faid to have given his Bartholomew-Fair, in Ridicule of the rul gar Tafte, which had diflik'd his Sejanus) and the by artfully feducing them, to be the Champions the Immoralities he himself detested, he should be an ply reveng'd on their former Severity and Ignorance This were indeed a Triumph! which, even the As thor of Cato, might have envy'd! Cato, 'tis true fucceeded, but reach'd not, by full forty Days, the Progress and Applauses, of the Beggars Opera. Wil it, however, admit of a Question, which of the to Compositions a good Writer, would rather with have been the Author of? Yet, on the other Side me we not allow, that to have taken a whole Nation High and Low, into a general Applause, has she a Power in Poetry, which, tho' often attempted the fame Kind, none but this one Author, could en yet arrive at? By what Rule, then, are we to judge our true National Tafte? But, to keep a little close to my Point.

The same Author, the next Year, had, according the Laws of the Land, transported his Hero to the West-Indies, in a second Part of the Beggars Open but so it happen'd, to the Surprize of the Publick, the Second Part was forbid to come upon the Stage! Van ous were the Speculations, upon this Act of Power Some thought that the Author, others that the Town was hardly dealt with; a third fort, who perhaps he envy'd him the Success of his first Part, affirm when it was printed, that whatever the Intention mig be, the Fact was in his Favour, that he had been greater Gainer, by Subscriptions to his Copy, than could have been by a bare Theatrical Presentation Whether any Part of these Opinions were true, la not concern'd to determine, or confider. But how the affected me, I am going to tell you. Soon after the ohibition, my Performance was to come upon the ge, at a Time, when many People were out of Huour, at the late Disappointment, and seem'd willing lay hold of any Pretence of making a Reprizal. eat Umbrage was taken, that I was permitted, to ve the whole Town to my felf, by this absolute Fordance of what, they had more mind to have been ertain'd with. And, some few Days before my while was acted, I was inform'd, that a ftrong Party uld be made against it: This Report I slighted, as not ceiving why it should be true; and when I was rwards told what was the pretended Provocation of Party, I flighted it, still more, as having less Reato suppose, any Persons could believe me capable d I had the Power) of giving such a Provocation. e Report, it feems, that had run against me, was : That, to make way for the Success of my own y, I had privately found means, or made Interest, the second Part of the Beggars Opera, might be press'd. What an involuntary Compliment did the forters of this Falshood make me? to suppose me Confideration enough to influence a great Offiof State, to gratify the Spleen, or Envy, of a nedian, so far, as to rob the Publick of an impocent ersion (if it were such) that none, but that cun-Comedian, might be fuffered to give it them. s is so very gross a Supposition, that it needs only wn senseless Face, to confound it; let that alone, , be my Defence against it. Bur against blind Maand staring Inhumanity, whatever is upon the e, has no Defence! There, they knew, I stood less, and expos'd, to whatever they might please ad, or afperfe me with. I had not confidered, poor il! that, from the Security of a full Pit, Dunces, at be Criticks, Cowards valiant, and Prentices tlemen! Whether any fuch were concern'd in the ther of my Play, I am not certain; for I never avour'd, to discover any one of its Assassins; I canford them a milder Name, from their unmanly manof destroying it. Had it been heard, they might have the same of the sa

Wet

OW

os ha rm

mig

een han

tation, I a

W the Pr

έ

ey I

ha

A

rfi

rė

n;

oug

nse

re :

A ngl

plic

er'd

hu

ght h'd

Eva

d, A

es l

the

eatre

e Ac

d of

t, no

ter-bi

han uth (

h'd no

have left me nothing to fay to them: "Tis true, faintly held up its wounded Head, a fecond Day, an would have spoke for Mercy, but was not suffered Not even the Presence of a Royal Heir apparent could protect it. But then I was reduc'd to be fering with them; their Clamour, then, became an Infolen which I thought it my Duty, by the Sacrifice of a Interest of my own, to put an End to. I therefor quitted the Actor for the Author, and stepping in ward to the Pit, told them, That fince I found the were not inclin'd, that this Play should go forward I gave them my Word, that after this Night, it for never be acted again : But that, in the mean time, Ibil they would consider, in whose Presence they were, a for that Reason, at least, would suspend what farm Marks of their Displeasure, they might imagine Il deserved. At this there was a dead Silence; a after some little Pause, a few civiliz'd Hands, for fy'd their Approbation. When the Play went on, observ'd about a Dozen Persons, of no extraording Appearance, fullenly walk'd out of the Pit. All which, every Scene of it, while uninterrupted, m with more Applause, than my best Hopes had expe ted. But it came too late: Peace to its Manes! Il given my Word it should fall, and I kept it, by give out another Play, for the next Day, though I ke the Boxes were all let, for the same again. Su then, was the Treatment I met with: How much it, the Errors of the Play might deserve, I refer the Judgment of those, who may have Curiosity, idle Time enough to read it. But if I had no occasi to complain of the Reception it met with, from quieted Audience, sure it can be no great Vanity, impute its Difgraces chiefly, to that fevere Refentment which a groundless Report of me had inflam'd: I those Disgraces have left me something to boast of, d of ] Honour preferable, even to the Applause of my y'd fo nemies: A noble Lord came behind the Scenes, a Actre told me, from the Box, where he was in waiting test 1 That what I faid, to quiet the Audience, we ht be extremely well taken there; and that I had be mmended for it, in a very obliging manner. Now, ough this was the only Tumult, that I have known have been so effectually appeared, these fifty Years, y any Thing that could be faid to an Audience, in e fame Humour, I will not take any great Merit to y self upon it; because when, like me, you will at humbly fubmit to their doing you all the Mischief ey can, they will, at any time, be fatisfy'd.

Sud

ch

er i

m y, I

met : Ye of,

ny E

iting

d bed

I have mention'd this particular Fact, to inforce hat I before observ'd, That the private Character of Actor, will always, more or lefs, affect his publick rformance. And if I suffer'd so much, from the re Sufficion of my having been guilty of a base Acn; what should not an Actor expect, that is ready ough, to think his whole private Character of no nequence? I could offer many more, tho' less fere Instances, of the same Nature. I have seen the of tender Sentiment of Love, in Tragedy, create ughter, instead of Compassion, when it has been plicable to the real Engagements of the Person, that er'd it. I have known good Parts thrown up, from humble Consciousness, that something in them, the put an Audience in mind of-what was rather h'd might be forgotten: Those remarkable Words es been a much stronger Jest, for being a true one. these are Reproaches, which in all Nations, the eatre must have been us'd to, unless we could supe Actors fomething more, than Human Creatures of Faults, or Frailties. 'Tis a Misfortune, at , not limited to the English Stage. I have seen the ter-bred Audience, in Paris, made merry, even ha modest Expression, when it has come from the uth of an Actress, whose private Character it a'd not to belong to. The apprehension of these l of Fleers, from the Witlings of a Pit, has been y'd so far, in our own Country, that a late valua-Actress (who was conscious her Beauty was not her test Merit) defired the Warmth of some Lines ht be abated, when they have made her too remarka-markably handsome : But in this Discretion the alone, few others were afraid of undeferving the things, that could be faid to them. But to confi this Matter feriously, I cannot but think, at a Play, fensible Auditor would contribute all he could, to being well deceiv'd, and not fuffer his Imagination far to wander, from the well-acted Character be him, as to gratify a frivolous Spleen, by Mocks personal Sneers, on the Performer, at the Expens his better Entertainment. But I must now take Wilks, and Powell, again, where I left them.

n

y y ty va

fid

ol

er

Por

d

hio

to 1

fro

uch

as

eac

lau

by

best

ness

ugh

ral;

valu

Inte

ger

not tho

whi

Jud

me

er, o

Though the Contention for Superiority, between them, feem'd about this time, to end in favour of former, yet the Distress of the Patentee (in having Servant his Master, as Powell had lately been) was much reliev'd by the Victory; he had only changed Man, but not the Malady: For Wilks, by being possession of so many good Parts, fell into the com Error of most Actors, that of over-rating their M or never thinking it is so thoroughly consider'd, ought to be; which generally makes them prop onably troublesome to the Master; who, they m confider, only pays them, to profit by them. Patentee therefore found it as difficult to fatisfy continual Demands of Wilks, as it was dangerous to fuse them; very few were made, that were not g ed, and as few were granted, as were not grudged Not but our good Master, was as sly a Tyrant, as was at the Head of a Theatre; for he gave the tors more Liberty, and fewer Days pay, than a his Predecessors: He would laugh with them Bottle, and bite them in their Bargains: Hel them poor, that they might not be able to rebel; fometimes merry, that they might not think of its their Articles of agreement had a Clause in them, he was fure to creep out at, viz. Their relpa Salaries, were to be paid, in such manner and pro tion, as others of the same Company were which in effect, made them all, when he pleas'4 limited Sharers of Loss, and himself sole propa profits; and this Loss, or Profit, they only had such pal accounts of, as he thought proper to give them. true, he would fometimes advance them Money not more, than he knew at most could be due to n) upon their Bonds; upon which, whenever they e mutinous, he would threaten to fue them. This the Net we danc'd in for several Years: But no nder we were Dupes, while our Mafter was a Law-

all

ing as eding mind,

opa mi

15 to

ed h

the

n 21

m 0

He

bel;

fitt

em,

respa

d pro

re p eas'd

propr

This Grievance, however, Wilks was refolv'd himself, at least, to remedy at any rate; and grew y more intractable, for every Day his Redress was y'd. Here our Master found himself under a Difty, he knew not well how to get out of: For as was a close subtle Man, he seldom made use of a fident, in his Schemes of Government: But here old Expedient of Delay, would stand him in no er stead; Wilks must instantly be comply'd with, Powell come again into Power! In a Word, he was 'd fo home, that he was reduced even to take my nion into his affiftance: For he knew I was a Rito neither of them; perhaps too, he had fancy'd, from the Success of my first Play, I might know uch of the Stage, and what made an Actor valuaas either of them: He faw too, that tho' they each of them five good Parts to my one; yet the lause which in my few, I had met with, was given by better Judges, than, as yet, had approv'd of eft they had done. They generally measured the ness of a Part, by the Quantity, or Length of it: ught none bad for being short, that were closelyal; nor any the better, for being long, without valuable Quality. But, in this, I doubt, as to Interest, they judg'd better than my self; for I generally observ'd, that those, who do a great not ill, have been preferr'd to those, who do but though never fo masterly. And therefore I allow, while there were so few good Parts, and as few Judges of them, it ought to have been no Wonme, that as an Actor, I was less valued, by the r, or the common People, than either of them:

all the advantage I had of them, was, that by not being troublesome, I had more of our Master's personal Inclination, than any Actor of the male Sex; and fe much of it, that I was almost the only one, whom at that time, he us'd to take into his parties of Pleasure: very often tete à tete, and sometimes, in a Partie quarree. These then were the Qualifications, however good, or bad, to which may be imputed our Mafter's having made Choice of me, to affift him in the Difficulty, under which he now labour'd. He was himfelf sometimes inclin'd to set up Powell again, as a Check upon the over-bearing Temper of Wilks: tho' to fay Truth, he lik'd neither of them; but was fill under a Necessity, that one of them should preside; tho' he scarce knew which of the two Evils to chuse. This Question, when I happen'd to be alone with him, was often debated in our Evening Conversation; nor indeed, did I find it an easy matter to know which party I ought to recommend to his Election. I knew they were neither of them Well-wishers to me, as in common they were Enemies to most Actors, in proportion to the Merit, that feem'd to be rifing in them. But as I had the prosperity of the Stage more at Heart, than any other Confideration, I could not be long undetermin'd, in my Opinion, and therefore gave it to our Master, at once, in favour of Wilks. I, with all the Force I could muster, infisted, "That if Pow-" ell were preferr'd, the ill Example of his Negli-" gence, and abandon'd Character (whatever his Me-" rit on the Stage might be) would reduce our Com-" pany to Contempt and Beggary; observing at the " fame time, in how much better Order our Affain " went forward, fince Wilks came among us, of which " I recounted feveral Inflances, that are not fo necel-" fary to tire my Reader with. All this, though he " allow'd to be true; yet Powell, he faid, was a better " Actor than Wilks, when he minded his Bufinels " (that is to fay, when he was, what he feldom was " fober) But Powell it feems, had still a greater Me-" rit to him, which was, (as he observed) that when " Affairs were in his Hands, he had kept the Ac

t I

Go

his

mer

of f duct

cont

his

Wilk

ake

ant

ftan

hen

eral ew :

ness

e had ight

imfel

rv'd

endat

e app

ew'd

ommo

mself,

erit;

ake hi t aski

ave a

Publ

" tors quiet, without one Day's Pay, for fix Weeks " together, and it was not every body could do that : " for you fee, faid he, Wilks will never be easy, un-" less I give him his whole Pay, when others have it " not, and what an Injustice would that be to the rest. if I were to comply with him? How do I know, but then they may be all, in a Mutiny, and may-" hab (that was his Expression) with Powell at the "Head of 'em ?" By this Specimen of our Debate, t may be judged, under how particular, and merry a Government, the Theatre then labour'd. To conclude, his Matter ended in a Resolution, to sign a new agreenent, with Wilks, which entitled him, to his full Pay four Pounds a Week, without any conditional Deluctions. How far foever my Advice might have ontributed to our Master's settling his Affairs upon his Foot, I never durst make the least Merit of it to Wilks, well knowing that his great Heart would have aken it as a mortal affront, had I (tho' never fo diantly) hinted, that his Demands had needed any a stance, but the Justice of them. From this Time, hen Wilks became first Minister, or Buftle-master-geeral of the Company. He, now, feem'd to take ew Delight, in keeping the Actors close to their Buness; and got every Play reviv'd with Care, in which e had acted the chief Part in Dublin: 'Tis true, this ight be done with a particular View of fetting off imself to Advantage; but if, at the same time, it m'd the Company, he ought not to want our Comendation: Now, tho' my own Conduct, neither had eappearance of his Merit, nor the Reward that folw'd his Industry; I cannot help observing, that it ew'd me, to the best of my power, a more cordialommon-wealth's Man: His first Views, in serving melf, made his Service to the whole but an incidental erit; whereas, by my profecuting the Means, to ke him easy, in his Pay, unknown to him, or withtasking any Favour for my felf, at the same time, ave a more unquestionable Proof of my preferring Publick, to my private Interest : From the same

4

n

0-

n.

rt,

n-

to

ith

w ili-

Ae-

m-

the airs

nich

cef-

n he etter

inel

was.

Me

Ac-

150 The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c.

principle I never murmured at whatever little parts fell to my Share, and tho' I knew it would not recommend me to the favour of the common People, I of. ten submitted to play wicked Characters, rather than they should be worse done by weaker Actors than my felf: But perhaps, in all this Patience under my Simation, I supported my Spirits, by a conscious Vanity: For I fancy'd I had more Reason to value myself up. on being fometimes the Confident, and Companion of our Master, than Wilks had, in all the more publick Favours he had extorted from him. I imagin'd too, there was fometimes as much Skill to be shewn, in: short part, as in the most voluminous, which he generally made choice of; that even the coxcombly Follies of a Sir John Daw, might as well distinguish the Capacity of an Actor, as all the dry Enterprizes, and bufy Conduct of a Truewit. Nor could I have any Reason to repine at the Superiority he enjoy'd, when I confider'd at how dear a Rate it was purchas'd, at continual Expence of a reftless Jealousy, and fresh Impatience — These were the Passions, that, in the height of his Successes, kept him lean to his lat Hour, while what I wanted in Rank, or Glory, wa amply made up to me, in Ease and Chearfulness. But let not this Observation either lessen his Merit, or lift up my own; fince our different Tempers were not, in our Choice, but equally natural, to both of us. To be employed on the Stage was the Delight of his Life; to be justly excused from it, was the Joy of mine: I lov'd Ease, and he Pre-eminence: In that, he might be more commendable. Tho' he often difturb'd me, he feldom could do it, without more disordering him-felf: In our Disputes, his Warmth could less bear Truth, than I could support manifest Injuries: He would hazard our Undoing, to gratify his Paffions, tho' otherwise an honest Man; and I rather chose to give up my Reason, or not see my Wrong, than run our Community by an equal Rashness. By this oppofite Conduct, our Accounts at the End of our Labours ring h flood thus: While he liv'd, he was the elder Man, when he dy'd, he was not fo old as I am: He never apt, a 0 aı

re

or ffe

ave ldo ip

efu

liet,

ilks

an a

bori ills,

vano

oy'c

er a ich : f-con

urn'c , upo

coln

ite o

n for

.

[-

n ıy

Q-

7:

pof

ck

00,

12

ne-

ies

the

and

any.

hen

, at

tful

, in laft

W25

But

lift

not,

To

ife;

e: I

right

me,

him-

bear He

Tions,

fe to

ruin

oppo-

Puno

Man,

never

eft the Stage, till he left the World': I never fo well njoy'd the World, as when I left the Stage: he dy'd n Possession of his Wishes; and I, by having had es cholerick Ambition, am still tasting mine, in Health and Liberty. But, as he in a great Meafure vore out the Organs of Life, in his incessant Labours. gratify the Publick, the many whom he gave Pleaare to, will always owe his Memory a favourable Reort-Some Facts, that will vouch for the Truth of this count, will be found in the Sequel of these Memoirs I have spoke with more Freedom of his quondam competitor Powell, let my good Intentions to future ctors, in shewing what will so much concern them to void, be my Excuse for it: For though Powell had om Nature, much more than Wilks; in Voice, and ar,in Elocution, in Tragedy, and Humour in Comedy reatly the Advantage of him; yet, as I have observ'd. om the Neglect and Abuse of those valuable Gifts, he ffer'd Wilks, to be of thrice the Service to our Socie-Let me give another Instance of the Reward, and avour which in a Theatre, Diligence and Sobriety dom fail of: Mills the elder grew into the Friendip of Wilks, with not a great deal more, than those eful Qualities to recommend him : he was an honest. iet, careful Man, of as few Faults as Excellencies, and ilks rather chose him for his second in many Plays. an an Actor of perhaps greater Skill, that was not fo poriously diligent. And from this constant affiduity, ills, with making to himself a Friend in Wilks, was vanc'd to a larger Salary, than any Man-actor had oy'd, during my Time on the Stage. I have yet to er a more happy Recommendation of Temperance. ich a late celebrated Actor was warn'd into, by the s-conduct of Powell. About the Year that Wilks urn'd from Dublin, Booth, who had commenc'd Acupon that Theatre, came over to the Company, in coln's-Inn-Fields: He was then but an Undergrate of the Buskin, and as he told me himself, had n for some Time too frank a Lover of the Bottle; but ring had the Happiness to observe, into what Conpt, and Diftreffes Powell had plung'd himself by the

the same Vice, he was so struck with the Terror of his Example, that he fix'd a Resolution (which from that Time, to the End of his Days, he strictly observ'd) of utterly reforming it; an uncommon Act of Philosophy in a young Man! of which in his Fame, and Fortune, he afterwards enjoy'd the Reward and Benefit. These Observations I have not meerly thrown together as a Moralist, but to prove, that the briskest loose Liver, or intemperate Man (though Morality were out of the Question) can never arrive at the necessary Excellencies of a good or useful Actor.

of to as mo the

wit fast

our in (

his '

he o icted

his

App

Moti

e vo

nóre

W

may

Plays

ny in he ne

It r

poufe

om tl

he oth

ad abo

hich qual n

heatri

Ш'd u

CHAP. VIII.

The Patentee of Drury-lane wifer than his Actors. His particular Management. The Author continues to write Plays. Why. The best dramatick Poets tensur'd, by J. Collier, in his Short View of the Stage. It has a good Effect. The Master of the Revels, from that Time, cautious, in his licensing new Plays. A Complaint against him. His Authority founded upon Custom only. The late Law for fixing that Authority, in a proper Person, consider'd.

THOUGH the Master of our Theatre had no Conception himself of Theatrical Merit, either in Authors, or Actors; yet his Judgment was govern'd by a saving Rule in both: He look'd into his Receipts for the Value of a Play, and from common Fame he judg'd of his Actors. But by whatever Rule he was govern'd, while he had prudently reserv'd to himself a Power of not paying them more than their Merit could get, he could not be much deceiv'd by their being over, or under-valued. In a Word, he had with great Skill, inverted the Constitution of the Stage, and and quite chang'd the Channel of Profits arising from it: Formerly (when there was but one Company) the Proprietors punctually paid the Actors, their appointed Salaries, and took to themselves only the clear Profits: But our wifer Proprietor, took first out of every Day's Receipts, Two Shillings in the Pound to himself; and left their Salaries to be paid, only, as the less, or greater Deficiencies of acting (according to his own accounts) would permit. What feem'd most extraordinary in these Measures, was, that at the fame time, he had perfuaded us to be contented with our Condition, upon his affuring us, That as faft as Money would come in, we should all be paid our Arrears: And, that we might not have it always n our Power to fay he had never intended to keep his Word; I remember, in a few Years after this Time, he once paid us nine Days, in one Week: This happen'd, when the Funeral or Grief Alamode, was first ded, with more than expected Success. Whether his well-tim'd Bounty was only allow'd us, to fave Appearances, I will not fay; but if that was his real Motive for it, it was too costly a Frolick to be reeated, and was at least, the only Grimace of its Kind e vouchfafed us; we never naving received one Day nore of those arrears in above Fifteen Years Service.

While the Actors were in this Condition, I think may very well be excus'd, in my prefuming to write lays; which I was forc'd to do, for the Support of ny increasing Family, my precarious Income, as an actor, being then too scanty, to supply it with even he necessaries of Life.

.

6

5

t

n

10

er

'd

6-

ne

he

m-

e.

eir

ad

and

It may be observable too, that my Muse, and my pouse, were equally prolifick; that the one was selom the Mother of a Child, but, in the same Year, he other made me the Father of a Play: I think we ad about a Dozen of each fort between us; of both hich Kinds, some dy'd in their Infancy, and near an qual number of each were alive, when I quitted the heatre. But it is no wonder, when a Muse is only all'd upon, by Family-Duty, she should not always rejoice, in the Fruit of her Labour. To this Necessity of Writing, then, I attribute the Defects of my second Play, which coming out too hastily, the Year after my first, turned to very little account. But hav. ing got as much, by my First, as I ought to have expected, from the Success of them both, I had no great Reason to complain: Not but, I confess, so bad was my Second, that I do not chuse to tell you the Name of it; and, that it might be peaceably forgotten, I have not given it a place in the Two Volumes of those I published in Quarto, in the Year 1721. And whenever I took upon me, to make some dormant Play of an old Author, to the best of my Judgment, fitter for the Stage, it was, honestly, not to be idle, that set me to work; as a good Housewife will mend old Linnen when she has not better Employment. But when I was more warmly engag'd, by a Subject, entirely new, I only thought it a good Subject, when it feem'd worthy of an abler Pen, than my own, and might prove as useful to the Hearer, as profitable, to myself: Therefore, whatever any of my Productions, might want of Skill, Learning, Wit, or Humour; or however unqualified I might be, to instruct others, who so ill govern'd myself: Yet such Plays (entirely my own) were not wanting, at least, in what our most admired Writers feem'd to neglect, and without which, I cannot allow the most taking Play, to be intrinsically Good, or to be a Work, upon which a Man of Senle and Probity should value himself: I mean, when they do not, as well prodesse, as delecture, give profit, with Delight. The Utile dulci was, of old, equally the Point; and has always been my Aim, however wide of the Mark, I may have shot my Arrow. It has often given me amazement, that our best Authors of that Time, could think the Wit, and Spirit of their Scenes, could be an Excuse for making the Looseness of them publick. The many Instances of their Talent fo abus'd, are too glaring, to need a closer Comment, and are sometimes too gross to be recited. If then, to have avoided this Imputation, or rather to have had the Interest, and Honour of Virtue, always in view,

N

t ai

P

ho

th

VO

Ki

cou

mo

hig

io

Wi

ton

he

lin

vill

P

H

R

B

Th

can give Merit, to a Play; I am contented, that my Readers should think such Merit, the All, that mine have to boast of. Libertines of mere Wit, and Pleafure, may laugh at these grave Laws, that would limit a lively Genius; but every fenfible honest Man, conscious of their Truth and Use, will give these Ralliers Smile for Smile, and shew a due Contempt, for their Merriment.

e

.

of 10

et

n-

en

eff.

n it

and

to

ons,

ur;

ere,

rely moft

nich,

cally

Sense

they

with the ! wide

It has

ors of their

ness of alents

nment

en, to ve had view,

CAB

But while our Authors took these extraordinary Liberties with their Wit, I remember the Ladies were then observ'd, to be decently afraid of venturing barefac'd to a new Comedy, 'till they had been affur'd they might do it, without the Risque of an Insult, to their Modesty; or, if their Curiosity were too strong, for their Patience, they took care, at least, to fave Appearances, and rarely came upon the first Days of acting, but in Masks (then daily worn, and admitted in the Pit, the Sides-boxes, and Gallery) which Cuftom. however, had so many ill Consequences attending it, that it has been abolish'd these many Years.

These Immoralities of the Stage, had, by an ayow'd Indulgence, been creeping into it, ever fince King Charles his Time: Nothing that was loofe. could then be too low for it: The London Cuckolds, the most rank Play that ever succeeded, was then in the highest Court-Favour. In this almost general Corruption, Dryden, whose Plays were more fam'd for their Wit, than their Chastity, led the Way, which he fairly confesses, and endeavours to excuse in his Epilogue to he Pilgrim, reviv'd in 1700, for his Benefit, in his delining Age and Fortune. The following Lines of it, will make good my Observation.

Perhaps the Person stretch'd a Point too far, When, with our Theatres, he wag'd a War. He tells you, that this very moral Age Receiv'd the first Infection from the Stage. But sure, a banish'd Court, with Lewdness fraught, The Seeds of open Vice returning brought.

Thus

156 The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c.

Thus lodg'd (as Vice by great Example thrives) It first debauch'd the Daughters, and the Wives. London, a fruitful Soil, yet never bore So plentiful a Crop of Horns before. The Poets, who must live by Courts, or starve. Were proud, so good a Government to serve; And mixing with Buffoons, and Pimps profane, Tainted the Stage, for some small Snip of Gain: For they, like Harlots under Bawds profest, Took all th' ungodly Pains, and got the leaft. Thus did the thriving Malady prevail, The Court, it's Head, the Poets but the Tail. The Sin was of our Native Growth, 'tis true, The Scandal of the Sin was wholly new. Misses there were but modestly conceald; Whitehall the naked Venus first reveal'd; Where standing, as at Cyprus, in her Shrine, The Strumpet was ador'd with Rites Divine, &c.

This Epilogue, and the Prologue, to the fame Play, written by Dryden, I spoke my self, which not being usually done by the same Person, I have a Mind, while I think of it, to let you know on what Occasion they both sell to my Share, and how other Actors were affected by it.

e V

F

or:

fer i

mfel

enti er, l

let t

de A

fucc

ues,

ly ur

tot

Ihav

quent

was

from

alion

w, t

ot ev

Sir John Vanbrugh, who had given some light Touches of his Pen to the Pilgrim, to affist the Benefit-Day of Dryden, had the Disposal of the Parts; and I being then as an Actor, in some Favour with him, he read the Play sirst with me alone; and was pleas'd to offer me my choice of what I might like best for myself in it. But as the chief Characters were not (according to my Taste) the most shining, it was no great Self-denial in me, that I desired, he would sirst take care of those, who were more difficult to be pleas'd; I therefore only chose for my self, two short ort incidental parts, that of the Stuttering Cook nd the Mad Englishman; in which homely Characr, I faw more matter for Delight, than those that ight have a better pretence to the Amiable: And hen the Play came to be acted, I was not deceiv'd, in v choice. Sir John, upon my being contented with little a share in the Entertainment, gave me the Elogue to make up my Mess, which being written so uch above the strain of common Authors, I confess, was not a little pleased with. And Dryden, upon his aring me repeat it to him, made me a further comment of trufting me with the Prologue. This for rticular Diffinction, was looked upon by the Acn, as fomething too extraordinary. But no one was impatiently ruffled at it as Wilks, who feldom chose t Words, when he spoke of any thing he did not e. The most gentle thing he faid of it was, That did not understand such Treatment; that, for his it, he looked upon it as an Affront to all the reft the Company, that there should be but One, out of Whole, judg'd fit to speak either a Prologue or an To quiet him, I offered to decline either in favour, or both, if it were equally eafy to the Auor: But he was too much concern'd to accept of an fer that had been made to another, in preference to melf; and which he feem'd to think his best way of enting was to contemn. But from that time, howr, he was resolved to the best of his power, never let the first Offer of a Prologue escape him : Which e Ambition, fometimes, made him pay too dear, for fuccess; the Flatness of the many miserable Prowes, that by this means fell to his Lot, seemed woly unequal to the few good ones he might have reato triumph in.

me

not

2

hat

Ac-

ne-

and

im,

as'd

for

not

no

first

be

two

hort

I have given you this Fact only as a fample of those quent Rubs and Impediments I met with, when any was made to my being diffinguished as an Actor; from this Incident too, you may partly fee what alioned fo many Prologues, after the Death of Berton, to fall into the Hands of one Speaker: But it ot every Successer to a vacant Post, that brings into it, the Talents equal to those of a Predecessor. fpeak a good Prologue well, is, in my Opinion, of the hardest Parts, and strongest proofs of sound locution; of which, I confess, I never thought any of the feveral who attempted it, shewed themselve by far, equal Masters to Betterton. Betterton, in Delivery of a good Prologue, had a natural Gravin that gave strength to good Sense; a tempered Spir that gave Life to Wit; and a dry Referve in smile, that threw Ridicule into its brightest Colour of these Qualities, in the speaking of a Prolon Booth only had the first, but attain'd not to the or two: Wilks had spirit, but gave too loose a Rein it, and it was feldom he could fpeak a grave a weighty Verse, harmoniously: His Accents were in quently too sharp and violent, which sometimes casioned his eagerly cutting off half the sound of & lables, that ought to have been gently melted into Melody of Metre. In Verses of Humour too, would fometimes carry the Mimickry farther than Hint would bear, even to a trifling Light, as if his felf were pleased to see it so glittering. In the Tra of this Criticism, I have been confirmed by the whose Judgment I dare more considently rely on, the my own. Wilks had many Excellencies; but if leave Prologue-speaking out of the Number, he w still have enough to have made him a valuable Ad And I only make this Exception from them, to cauti others from imitating, what in his Time, they mig have too implicitly admir'd. But I have a Word two more to fay concerning the Immoralities of Stage. Our Theatrical Writers were not only account of Immorality, but Prophaneness; many flagrant stances of which were collected, and publish'd by Nonjuring Clergyman, Jeremy Collier, in his Vi of the Stage, &c. about the Year 1697. Hower just his Charge against the Authors, that then wo for it, might be, I cannot but think his fentence, gainst the Stage itself, is unequal; Reformation, thinks, too mild a Treatment for it, and is therefore laying his Ax to the Root of it. If this were to be

Se.

ir

to

t

M

n

ly, k i

in om

alog

ord,

hi

fe ?

wl

llian

6 pr

his .

re ex

gra

his f

those.

reat (

onge

ule of Judgment, for Offences of the same Nature hat might become of the Pulpit, where many a fedious and corrupted Teacher, has been known, to cor the most pernicious Doctrine with the Mask of Retion? This puts me in mind of what the noted To. ains, the Comedian, a Fellow of a wicked Wit, said on this Occasion; who being ask'd, What could insport Mr, Cottier into so blind a Zeal, for a geral Suppression of the Stage, when only some partilar Authors had abus'd it; whereas the Stage, he uld not but know, was generally allow'd, when thely conducted, to be a delightful Method of mendgour Morals? For that Reason, (reply'd Hains:) o of a Trade, you know, can never agree.

The Authors of the Old Batchelor, and of the Refe, were those, whom Collier most laboured to conft of Immorality; to which they feverally publish'd ir Reply. The first feem'd too much hurt, to be ato defend himself; and the other selt him so little,

t his Wit only laugh'd at his Lashes.

ide d

pin n h oun logu oth

e fre

es or f Syl to th

o, land

True the the if we

Acto

auti

mig

ord

of

CCU

int l

by

Vi

ower

WTO

nce,

on,

ore

to be

Ru

My first Play, of the Fool in Fashion, too, being n in a course of Success; perhaps for that Reason, ly, this severe Author thought himself oblig'd to atkit; in which, I hope, he has shown more Zeal, in Justice. His greatest Charge against it is, That ometimes uses the Word, Faith ! as an Oath in the alogue: But if Faith may as well fignify our given ord, or Credit, as our Religious Belief, why might his Charity have taken it, in the less Criminal fe? Nevertheless, Mr. Collier's Book, was, upon whole, thought fo laudable a Work, that King lliam, soon after it was published, granted him a prosequi, when he stood answerable to the Law. his having absolv'd two Criminals, just before they e executed for High Treason. And it must be fargranted, that his calling our Dramatick Writers his strict account, had a very wholesome Effect, uphose, who writ after this time. They were, now, teat deal more upon their Guard; Indecencies were onger Wit; and, by degrees, the Fair Sex came again to fill the Boxes, on the first Day of a new Co medy, without Fear or Cenfure. But the Master of the Revels, who then, licens'd all Plays for the Stage, at fifted this Reformation, with a more zealous Severing than ever. He would ftrike out whole Scenes of an cious, or immoral Character, tho' it were visible fhewn to be reform'd, or punish'd. A severe Instance of this Kind falling upon myself, may be an Excel for my relating it. When Richard the Third (as Ial ter'd it from Shakespear) came from his Hands to b Stage, he expung'd the whole First Act, without for ring a Line of it. This extraordinary Stroke of Sic volo, occasion'd my applying to him, for the im Indulgence of a Speech, or two, that the other for Acts might limp on, with a little less absurdity. No he had not Leisure to consider what might be separate ly inoffensive. He had an Objection to the whole All and the Reason he gave for it was, that the Distress of King Henry the Sixeh, who is kill'd by Richard the first Act, would put weak People too much in min of King James, then living in France; a notal Proof of his Zeal for the Government ! Those wh have read, either the Play, or the History, I de fay, will think he strain'd hard for the Parallel. In word, we were forc'd, for fome few Years to let the Pl take its Fate, with only four Acts divided into for by the loss of fo confiderable a Limb, may one a modefily suppose, it was robb'd of, at least, a fifth pa of that Favour, it afterwards met with? For the't first Act was at last recovered, and made the Play wh again; yet the Relief came too late, to repay me the pains I had taken in it. Nor did I ever hear the this zealous Severity of the Master of the Revels, afterwards thought justifiable. But my Good-fortun in process of Time, gave me an Opportunity to with my Oppressor, in my Turn.

The Patent granted by his late Majesty King Gar I. to Richard Steel, and his Affigns, of which I one, made us fole Judges of what Plays might be m per for the Stage, without submitting them, to the Approbation

in

6 ea

S

hat

I

Ito

to

m

es,

goi

Si wer

fon

en My

ly a

Ob ally

ha

Alth

mem

Play

n of hftar

pprobation, or License of any other particular Pern. Notwithstanding which, the Master of the Reels demanded his Fee of Forty Shillings, upon our fing a new One, tho' we had spar'd him the Trouble perufing it. This occasioned my being deputed to m, to enquire into the Right of his Demand, and make an amicable End of our Dispute. I confess, did not diflike the Office; and told him, according my Instructions, That I came not to defend, even r own Right, in prejudice to his; that if our Pant, had inadvertently superseded the Grant of any forer Power, or Warrant, whereon he might ground Pretensions, we would not infift upon our Broad. al, but would readily answer his Demands upon ht of fuch his Warrant, any thing in our Patent to contrary notwithstanding. This I had reason to ink he could not do; and, when I found he made direct Reply to my Question, I repeated it with eater Civilities, and Offers of Compliance, 'till I s forc'd in the Fnd to conclude, with telling him, at as his Pretentions were not back'd with any visi-Instrument of Right, and as his strongest Plea was flom, we could not so far extend our Complaisance, to continue his Fees upon so slender a Claim to m: And from that Time, neither our Plays, or his es, gave either of us any further trouble: In this gotiation, I am the bolder to think Justice was on Side, because the Law lately pass'd, by which the wer of Licensing Plays, &c. is given to a proper fon, is a strong Presumption, that no Law had ever en that Power to any such Person before. My having mentioned this Law, which so immedily affected the Stage, inclines me to throw out a. Observations upon it : But I must first lead you grailly thro' the Facts, and natural Causes, that made ha Law necessary.

Co fthe rity, a vi-

tano

xcu

I al-

final for

arate e Aa

treffe

rd i

min e who

In

e Pl

five

ne m

h pa

10' t Whe

me

ar th

S, W ortui

to ta

Gen hIm

be p

to t

batio

Although it had been taken for granted, from Time memorial, that no Company of Comedians, could Plays, &c. without the Royal Licence, or Protecof some legal Authority; a Theatre was, nothstanding, erected in Goodman's-Fields, about feven

P 3

Years ago, where Plays, without any fuch Licent were acted for fome time, unmolefted, and with impunity. After a Year or two, this Playhouse was thought a Nusance too near the City: Upon which the Lord Mayor, and Aldermen, petition'd the Crown to fun press it: What Steps were taken, in favour of the Petition, I know not, but common Fame feem'd to al low from what had, or had not been done in it, the acting Plays in the faid Theatre was not evidently us Jawful. However, this Question of acting without Licence, a little time after, came to a nearer Decil on in Westminster-Hall; the Occasion of bringing thither was this: It happened that the Purchasers of Patent, to whom Mr. Booth and my felf had fold on Shares, were at variance with the Comedians, the were then left to their Government, and the Variand ended, in the chief of those Comedians deserting, a fetting up for themselves in the little House in the Ha Market, in 1733, by which Defertion the Patente were very much distressed, and considerable Loss Their Affairs being in this desperate Condition, the were advis'd, to put the Act of the Twelfth of Que Anne, against Vagabonds, in force, against these D ferters, then acting in the Hay-Market without Licens Accordingly, one of their chief Performers was take from the Stage by a Justice of Peace his Warrant, a committed to Bridewell as one within the Penalty the faid Act. When the Legality of this Commi ment was disputed in Westminster-Hall, by all I con observe, from the learned Pleadings on both Si (for I had the Curiofity to hear them) it did not a pear to me, that the Comedian, fo committed, within the Description of the said Act, he being House-keeper, and having a Vote for the Westmin Members of Parliament. He was discharged accor ingly, and conducted through the Hall, with the Co gratulations of the Crowds that attended, and will well to his Cause.

roi

he

riti

an ut ate

lay-

le-u

ond

leeta

bu

e Pa

omec

s G

ed, i

tufe ongl

The Issue of this Trial threw me, at that time, to a very odd Reslexion, viz. That is acting the without Licence, did not make the Performers Vag ipulipuordfupthat

that

y un-

out s ecifi

ng i

ofth

d ou

riano

, an

e Hay

tente Losen

n, the

Que

se D

icena

s take

nt, 2

nalty

omm

I cou

b Sid

not a

ed, W

being

fimin

accor he Co

WI

ime, i

rs Vag

bonds, unless they wandered from their Habitations fo to do, how particular was the Case of Us three late Managing Actors, at the Theatre-Royal, who in twenty Years before had paid, upon an Averidge, at least Twenty Thousand Pounds, to be protected (as Ac. tors) from a Law, that has not fince appeared to be against us. Now, whether we might certainly have fled without any Licence at all, I shall not pretend to determine; but this I have, of my own 'Knowledge, o fay, that in Queen Anne's Reign, the Stage was in uch Confusion, and its Affairs in such Distress, that Sir John Vanbrugh, and Mr. Congreve, after they had eld it about one Year, threw up the Management of t, as an unprofitable Post, after which, a Licence for fling was not thought worth any Gentleman's asking or, and almost feem'd to go a begging, till some time fter, by the Care, Application, and Industry of three Actors, it became so prosperous, and the Profits so onfiderable, that it created a new place, and a Sineere of a Thousand Pounds a Year, which the Labour f those Actors constantly paid, to such Persons as had. om time to time, Merit or Interest enough, to get heir Names inferted as Fourth Managers in a Licence ith them, for acting Plays, &c. 'a preferment, that any a Sir Francis Wrongbead would have jump'd at. ut to go on with my Story. This Endeavour of the atentees, to suppress the Comedians acting in the lay-Market, proving ineffectual, and no hopes of a e-union then appearing, the Remains of the Compaleft in Drury-Lane, were reduced to a very low ondition At this time a third purchaser, Charles letwood, Esq; stept in; who judging the best Time buy was, when the Stock was at the lowest price, uck up a Bargain at once, for five Parts in Six of e Patent; and at the fame time, gave the revolted pmedians their own Terms to return, and come under s Government in Drury-Lane, where they now ntinue to act, at very ample Salaries, as I am infored, in 1738. But (as I have observed) the late use of the prosecuted Comedian having gone so ongly in his Favour, and the House in Goodman's-

Fields too, continuing to act with as little Authority unmolested; these so tolerated Companies gave Encouragement to a broken Wit, to collect a fourth Com. pany, who for fome Time acted Plays in the Har-Market, which House the united Drury-Lane Comedians had lately quitted: This enterprifing Person, I fay (whom I do not chuse to name, unless it could be to his Advantage, or that it were of Importance) had Senfe enough to know that the best Plays with bad Actors, would turn but to a very poor Account; and therefore found it necessary to give the publick some Pieces of an extraordinary Kind, the Poetry of which he conceiv'd ought to be fo ftrong, that the greatest Dunce of an Actor could not spoil it: He knew too, that as he was in hafte to get Money, it would take up less. Time to be intrepidly abusive, than decently entertaining; that to draw the Mob after him, he must rake the Channel, and pelt their Superiors; that to shew himself somebody, he must come up to Juvenal's Advice, and stand the Confequence:

Aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris, et carcere dignum Si vis esse aliquis Juv. Sat. I.

Such then was the mettlesome Modesty he set out with; upon this Principle he produc'd several stank, and free Farces, that seem'd to knock all Dissinctions of Mankind on the Head: Religion, Laws, Government, Priests, Judges, and Ministers, were all laid state at the Feet of this Herculean Satyrist! This Drawcansir in Wit, that spared neither Friend nor Foel who, to make his poetical Fame immortal, like another Erastratus, set Fire to his Stage, by writing up to an Act of Parliament to demolish it. I shall not give the particular Strokes of his Ingenuity a Chance to be remembred, by reciting them; it may be enough to say, in general Terms, they were so openly slagrant that the Wisdom of the Legislature thought it high Time, to take a proper Notice of them.

bel hir

for hew treatily with tim, eed

pon

Differ

lain'

jurie

ere,

e, at ead w

the

s this

ords:

Having now shown, by what Means there came to be four Theatres, besides a fifth for Operas, in London, all open at the fame Time, and that while they were for numerous, it was evident some of them must have farv'd, unless they fed upon the Trash and Filth of Buffoonery and Licentiousness; I now come, as I promis'd, to speak of that necessary Law, which has reduced their Number, and prevents the Repetition of such Abuses, in those that remain open for the publick. Recreation.

,

9

n d

m

28

to nat

el, ne-

and

t. I.

out

ank,

tions

vern

flat,

raw

Foe!

ano

ng up

11 no

hance

nough

agrant

t high

Havin

While this Law was in Debate, a lively Spirit, and uncommon Eloquence was employ'd against it. It was urg'd, That one of the greatest Goods we can enjoy, is Liberty. (This we may grant to be an uncontestable Truth, without its being the least Objection to this-Law.) It was faid too, That to bring the Stage under the Restraint of a Licencer, was leading the Way to in attack upon the Liberty of the Press. mounts but to a Jealousy at best, which I hope, and elieve all honest Englishmen have as much Reason to hink as groundless, as to fear it is a just Jealousy; for the Stage, and the Press, I shall endeavour to lew, are very different Weapons to wound with. If a reat Man could be no more injured, by being personlly ridicul'd, or made contemptible in a Play, than y the same Matter only printed, and read against im, in a Pamphlet, or the strongest Verse; then inted the Stage and the Press might pretend, to be pon an equal Foot of Liberty: But when the wide difference between these two Liberties comes to be exlain'd, and confider'd, I dare say we shall find the pjuries from one, capable of being ten times more fere, and formidable, than from the other: Let us e, at least, if the Case will not be vastly alter'd. ead what Mr. Collier, in his Defence of his Short View the Stage, &c. page 25, fays to this Point; he ts this Difference, in a clear Light. These are his ords:

2017 see 1 922 3000

166 The Life of Mr. Colley CIBBER, &c.

"This Satyr of a Comedian, and another Poet have a different Effect upon Reputation: A Character of Disadvantage upon the Stage, makes a stronger Impression, than elsewhere: Reading is but Hearing at second-hand; now Hearing, at best, is a more languid Conveyance, than Sight. For as Horace observes, Segnius irritant animum, demissa per aurem, Quam quæ sunt oculis subjecta sidelibus.

" The Fye is much more affecting, and strikes deeper " into the Memory, than the Ear: Besides, upon " the Stage, both the Senses are in Conjunction. The " Life of the Actor fortifies the Object, and awakens " the Mind to take hold of it-Thus a dramatic abuse " is riveted, in the Audience; a Jest is improv'd into " Argument, and Rallying grows up into Reason: " Thus a Character of Scandal becomes almost indeli-" ble; a Man goes for a Blockhead, upon Content, and he that is made a Fool in a Play is often made one for his Life. 'Tis true, he passes for such only " among the prejudic'd, and unthinking; but these " are no inconsiderable Division of Mankind. For these Reasons, I humbly conceive, the Stage stands " in need of a great deal of Discipline and Restraint: " To give them an unlimited Range, is in effect to " make them Masters of all moral Distinctions, and " to lay Honour and Religion, at their Mercy. To " shew Greatness ridiculous, is the Way to lose the " Use, and abate the Value of the Quality. Things " made little in jest, will soon be so in earnest; for " Laughing, and Esteem, are seldom bestow'd on the " fame Object." If this was Truth, and Reason (as sure it was) for-

If this was Truth, and Reason (as sure it was) forty Years ago; will it not carry the same Conviction with it to these Days, when there came to be a much stronger Call for a Reformation of the Stage, than when this Author wrote against it, or perhaps than was ever known, since the English Stage had a Being! And now let us alk another Question! Does not the

zene-

n

the

mo

hig

mil

of a

der

puni it ai

er a

ded

triu

inno whil

2 M

guiff

pell'o

Accu

fice,

the lo

does,

Liber

to fuf

ts a V

Liber

Enqui

gar A

thority

Harleg

Malice

much

general Opinion of Mankind suppose, that the Honour, and Reputation of a Minister is, or ought to be, as dear to him, as his Life? Yet when the Law, in Queen Anne's Time, had made even an unsuccessful attempt upon the Life of a Minister, capital, could any Reason be found, that the Fame, and Honour of his Character should not be under equal Protection? Was the Wound that Guiscard gave to the late Lord Oxford, when a Minister, a greater Injury, than the Theatrical Infult which was offer'd to a later Minister, in a more valuable Part, his Character? Was it not as high Time, then, to take this dangerous Weapon of mimical Infolence, and Defamation out of the Hands of a mad Poet, as to wrest the Knife from the lifted Hand of a Murderer? And is not that Law of a milder Nature, which prevents a Crime, than that which punishes it, after it is committed? May not one think it amazing, that the Liberty of defaming lawful power and dignity, should have been so eloquently contended for? or especially that this Liberty ought to triumph in a Theatre, where the most able, the most innocent, and most upright Person, must himself be, while the wound is given, defenceles? How long must a Man fo injur'd, lie bleeding, before the Pain and Anguish of his Fame (if it suffers wrongfully) can be difpell'd? or fay, he had deferv'd Reproof, and publick Accusation, yet the Weight and Greatness of his Office, never can deferve it from a publick Stage, where the lowest Malice by fawcy Parallels, and abusive Inuendoes, may do every Thing but name him: But alas! Liberty is so tender, so chaste a Virgin, that, it seems, not o fuffer her to do irreparable Injuries, with Impunity, is a Violation of her! It cannot fure be a Principle of Liberty, that would turn the Stage into a Court of Enquiry, that would let the partial Applauses of a vulgar Audience give Sentence upon the Conduct of Authority, and put Impeachments into the Mouth of a Harlequin? Will not every impartial Man think, that Malice, Envy, Faction, or Mis-rule, might have too auch Advantage over lawful Power, if the Range of 8

e

0

.....

t,

e

y e

70

t:

to

nd'

0 ne

gs

10

18

1-

on'

ch

an

an

he e768 The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c.

fuch a Stage-liberty were unlimited, and infifted on a be enroll'd among the glorious Rights of an Engli av

oo id

ed) cen

ge

ore

eop.

Red

air

re

at

it W

re

OW

ay :

Ig

onl eds

ftak

e, v

C

the

ne i

the

Bo

en le F

judi

h the Subject ?

I remember much such another ancient Libers, which many of the good People of England were on extremely fond of; I mean that of throwing Squh and Crackers, at all Spectators without distinction, up on a Lord Mayor's Day; but about forty Years ago certain Nobleman happening to have one of his in burnt out by this misohievous Merriment, it occasion a penal Law to prevent those Sorts of Jests, from bein laugh'd at for the future: Yet I have never heard, the most zealous Patriot ever thought such a Law we

the least Restraint upon our Liberty.

If I am ask'd, why I am fo voluntary a Champing for the Honour of this Law, that has limited the Nun ber of Play-Houses, and which now can no long concern me, as a professor of the Stage ? I reply, the it being a Law, so nearly relating to the Theatre, feems not at all foreign to my History, to have take notice of it; and as I have farther premis'd, to gin the Publick a true Portrait of my Mind, I ought his ly to let them fee how far I am, or am not a Blow head, when I pretend to talk of ferious Matters, the may be judg'd fo far above my Capacity: No will in the least discompose me, whether my Obserta ons are contemn'd, or applauded. A Blockhead is n always an unhappy Fellow, and if the World will flatter us, we can flatter ourselves; perhaps too it wi be as difficult to convince us, we are in the wrong, that you wifer Gentlemen are one Tittle the better to your Knowledge. It is yet a Question, with me, when ther we weak Heads have not as much Pleasure too, giving our shallow Reason a little Exercise, as the clearer Brains have, that are allow'd to dive into deepest Doubts and Mysteries; to restect, or form Judgment upon remarkable Things past, is as delighted to me, as it is to the gravest Politician to penetrate in to what is present, or to enter, into Speculations up on what is, or is not likely to come. Why are Histo ies written, if all Men are not to judge of them? Therefore, if my Reader has no more to do, than have, I have a Chance for his being as willing to ave a little more upon the same Subject, as I am to ive it him.

When direct Arguments against this Bill were found weak, Recourse was had to diffuafive ones: It was id. that this Restraint upon the Stage, would not reedy the Evil complain'd: That a Play refus'd to be cen'd, would fill be printed, with double Advange, when it should be infinuated, that it was reu'd, for some Strokes of Wit, &c. and would be ore likely, then, to have its Effect, among the eple. However natural this Confequence may em, I doubt it will be very difficult, to give a prin-Satyr, or Libel, half the Force, or Credit of an Hed one. The most artful or notorious, Lye, or ain'd Allusion that ever slander'd a great Man, may read, by some People, with a Smile of Contempt. at worst, it can impose but on one Person at once : t when the Words of the same plausible Stuff, shall repeated on a Theatre, the Wit of it among a owd of Hearers, is liable to be over-valu'd, and ly unite, and warm a whole Body of the Malicious. Ignorant, into a Plaudit; nay, the partial Claps only twenty ill-minded Persons, among several huneds of filent Hearers, shall, and often have been, taken for a general Approbation, and frequently wn into their Party the indifferent, or Inapprehene, who rather, than be thought not to understand Conceit, will laugh, with the Laughers, and join the Triumph! But alas! the quiet Reader of the ne ingenious Matter, can only like for himfelf the Poison has a much slower Operation, upon Body of a People, when it is so retail'd out, than en fold to, a full Audience by wholesale. The le Reader too may happen to be a sensible, or unjudic'd Person; and then the merry Dose meeting h the Antidote of a found Judgment, perhaps may e no Operation at all: With fuch a one, the t of the most ingenious Satyr, will only, by its

lock

illi

120 is no

t wil

er h

who

tho

to th htfi

te in ns up

Lifto

IIG

intrinsick Truth, or Value, gain upon his Approbal on; or if it be worth an Answer, a printed Falshoo may possibly be confounded by printed Proofs again But against Contempt, and Scandal heighten and colour'd by the Skill of an Actor, ludicroully fufing it into a Multitude, there is no immediate I fence to be made, or equal Reparation to be had it; for it would be but a poor Satisfaction, at leaft, ter lying long patient, under the Injury, that Ti only is to fhew (which would probably be the Cal that the Author of it was a desperate Indigent, the did it for Bread. How much less dangerous, or offer five, then, is the written, than the acted Scandel The Impression the Comedian gives to it, is a kind double Stamp upon the Poet's Paper, that raises it ten times the intrinfic Value. Might we not strength en this Argument too, even by the Eloquence, it feem'd to have oppos'd this Law? I will fay for felf, at least, that when I came to read the printed A guments against it, I could scarce believe they we the fame, that had amaz'd, and rais'd fuch Admira on, in me, when they had the Advantage of a line ly Elocution, and of that Grace and Spirit, which gave Strength and Luftre to them, in the De very!

ait

u

ay

OV

he

en

am

ve

ing

d S

an

ade

S

in ]

to

ten

bei

ine

n

it

its

gn'

Upon the whole; if the Stage ought ever to be been reform'd; if to place a Power fomewhere of a straining its Immoralities was not inconfistent, with Liberties of a civiliz'd People (neither of who sure any mortal Man of Sense can dispute) might its have shewn a Spirit too poorly prejudiced, to have needed for rational a Law, only because, the Honour, a office of a Minister might happen, in some small Man fure, to be protected by it.

But however little weight there may be, in the offervations I have made upon it, I shall for my of Part always think them just; unless I should be to see (which I do not expect) some future Set of right Ministers use their utmost endeavours to reprise

And now, we have feen the Consequence of what any People are apt to contend for, Variety of Playoules! How was it possible so many could honestly bill on what was fit to be feen ? Their extraordina. Number, of Course, reduced them to live upon the ratification of fuch Hearers, as they knew would be of pleas'd with publick Offence; and publick Offence. what kind soever, will always be a good Reason for aking Laws, to restrain it.

in the in De La transfer in the internal internal in the inter dA

Wo

nira

live

which

Del

o ha

of

, with

t its ave t

ur, 2

1 Ma

he 0 ny o

t of repe To conclude, let us now confider this Law, in a lite different Light; let us leave the political Part it quite out of the Question; what Advantage uld either the Spectators of Plays, or the Masters of ay-houses have gain'd, by its having never been made? ow could the same Stock of Plays supply four heatres, which (without fuch additional Entertainents, as a Nation of common Sense ought to be aam'd of) could not well support two? Satiety must ve been the natural Consequence of the same Plays ing twice as often repeated, as now they need be ; d Satiety puts an end to all Tastes, that the Mind of an can delight in. Had therefore, this Law been de feven Years ago, I should not have parted with Share in the Patent, under a thousand Pounds more, in I receiv'd for it——So that as far as I am ato judge, both the Publick, as Spectators, and the tentees, as Undertakers, are, or might be, in a way being better entertain'd, and more confiderable iners by it.

now return to the State of the Stage, where I it about the Year 1697, from whence this pursuit its Immoralities, has led me farther, than I first ign'd to have follow'd it.

CHAP. IX.

A small Apology, for writing on. The different State of the two Companies. Wilks invited over from Dublin. Estcourt, from the same Stage, the Winter following. Mrs. Oldfield's first Admission to the Theatre-Royal. Her Character. The great Theatre in the Hay-Market built, for Betterton's Company. It answers not their Expectation. Some Observations upon it. A Theatrical State Secret.

in

his

on ver

ow

ha

muf

Fre

, w less

eir :

ars

you

tter.

ough

ospen

ferio

ite 1

d the

NOW begin to doubt, that the Gayete du Cam in which I first undertook this Work, may have drawn me into a more laborious Amufement, that I shall know how to away with: For though I carnot fay, I have yet jaded my Vanity, it is not imposble but by this time, the most candid of my Reader may want a little Breath; especially when they con fider that all this Load, I have heap'd upon their p tience, contains but feven Years of the forty three pass'd upon the Stage; the History of which Period have enjoyn'd myself to transmit to the Judgment Oblivion) of Posterity. However, even my Dulad will find fomebody to do it right; if my Reader is ill-natur'd one, he will be as much pleas'd to find me Dunce in my old age, as possibly he may have been to prove me a brisk Blockhead, in my Youth: But he has no Gall to gratify, and would (for his fimple musement) as well know, how the Play-houses we on forty Years ago, as how they do now, I will h neftly tell him the rest of my Story as well as I a Least therefore, the frequent Digressions, that he broke in upon it, may have entangled his Memor I must beg leave just to throw together the Heads what I have already given him, that he may again cover the Clue of my discourse.

Let him, then, remember, from the Year 1660 to 684, the various Fortune of the (then) King's, and Duke's, two famous Companies; their being reduc'd o one united; the diftinct Characters I have given of hirteen Actors, which in the Year 1690 were the most amous, then, remaining of them; the Cause of their eing again divided in 1695, and the Consequences of hat Division, 'till 1697; from whence I shall lead hem to our Second Union in-Hold ! let me feey, it was in that memorable Year, when the two lingdoms of England and Scotland were made one. and I remember a particular, that confirms me I am ight in my Chronology; for the Play of Hamlet beig acted foon after, Estcourt, who then took upon him fay any thing, added a fourth Line to Shakeear's Prologue to the Play, in that Play, which oginally confifted but of three, but Effcourt made it in thus:

> For Us, and for our Tragedy, Thus stooping to your Clemency, [This being a Year of Unity,] We beg your hearing Patiently.

his new Chronological Line coming unexpectedly on the Audience, was received with Applause, the veral grave Faces look'd a little out of Humour at it. lowever, by this Fact it is plain our Theatrical Unihappen'd in 1708. But to speak of it in its place, must go a little back again.

22

t,

g. be

at

for ett

it.

have

than

can-

poff-

aden

CON

rp

ree

iod

nt o ulne

15 2

me

been

But

ple !

s we

ill b

Ica

t ha

emon

eads o

gainn

From 1697, to this Union, both Companies went, without any memorable Change in their Affairs, less it were that Betterton's People (however good in eir Kind) were most of them too far advanced in ears to mend; and tho' we, in Drury-Lane, were by young to be excellent, we were not too old to be tter. But what will not Satiety depreciate? For ough I must own, and avow, that in our highest ofperity, I always thought we were greatly their feriors; yet by our good Fortune of being seen in ite new Lights, which several new-written Plays d shewn us in, we now began to make a considerable

Stand

Stand against them. One good new Play, to a rifing Company, is of inconceivable Value. In Oromin (and why may I not name another, the' it be my own ?) in Love's last Shift, and in the Sequel of it the Relapse; several of our People shew'd themselve in a new Style of Acting, in which Nature had not a vet been feen. I cannot here forget a Misfortune that befel our Society, about this Time, by the Loss of a young Actor, Hildebrand Horden, who was kill'd a the Bar of the Rose Tavern, in a frivolous, rash, as cidental Quarrel; for which a late Refident at Venia Colonel Burgess, and several other Persons of Distinction tion, took their Trials, and were acquitted. The young Man had almost every natural Gift, that could promise an excellent Actor; he had besides, a good deal of Table-wit, and Humour, with a handsome person, and was every Day rising into publick Favour Before he was bury'd, it was observable, that two o three Days together, feveral of the Fair Sex, we dres'd, came in Masks (then frequently worn) as fome in their own Coaches, to vifit this Theatrical He ro, in his Shrowd. He was the elder Son of D Horden, Minister of Twickenham, in Midalesex. B this Misfortune was foon repair'd, by the Retuna Wilks, from Dublin (who upon this young Man Death, was fent for over) and liv'd long enough amon us to enjoy that Approbation, from which the other was fo unhappily cut off. The Winter following Escourt, the famous Mimick, of whom I have alto dy spoken, had the same Invitation from Irelan where he had commenc'd Actor : His first Part has at the Theatre Royal, was the Spanish Friar, in which tho' he had remembred every Look and Motion of late Tony Leigh, fo far as to put the Spectator ve much in mind of him; yet it was visible through the whole, notwithstanding his Exactness in the Out-line the true Spirit, that was to fill up the Figure, was a the same, but unskilfully dawb'd on, like a Chil painting upon the Face of a Metzo-tinto: It was to plain to the judicious, that the Conception was not own, but imprinted in his Memory, by another whol

d

fo

it

(n fil

cli

lic cai

eve

OL

cor

Con

Ref

Sick

was vere

Fem

o th

Cour

Dldfi

ll th

vere

The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c. 175

whom he only presented a dead Likeness. But these were Desects, not so obvious to common Spectators; no wonder, therefore, if by his being much sought after, in private Companies, he met with a fort of Indulgence, not to say Partiality, for what he sometimes did upon the Stage.

ing

my it,

lva

ot a

that of a

'd at

, ac-

enia,

finc-

Thi

could

good

vout

wo a

and

al He

f Di Bu

umo

Man

amon

othe

OWIN

alra

Irelan

rt her

which of th

or ver

it-line

was n

was to not h

Who

In the Year 1699, Mrs. Oldfield was first taken into the House, where she remain'd about a Twelvemonth almost a Mute, and unheeded, 'till Sir John Vanbrugh, who first recommended her, gave her the Part of Alinda, in the Pilgrim revis'd. This gentle Character, happily became that want of Confidence, which is inseparable from young Beginners, who without it, seldom arrive to any Excellence: Notwithstanding, I own I was, then fo far deceiv'd in my Opinion of her, that I thought, she had little more than her Person. that appear'd necessary to the forming a good Actress: for she set out with so extraordinary a Diffidence, that it kept her too despondingly down, to a formal, plain (not to fay) flat manner of speaking. Nor could the filver Tone of her Voice, 'till after some Time, incline my Ear to any Hope in her Favour. But publick Approbation is the warm Weather of a Theatrial Plant, which will foon bring it forward, to what ever Perfection Nature has defign'd it. However Mrs. Oldfield (perhaps for want of fresh Parts) feem'd to come but flowly forward, 'till the Year 1703. Company, that Summer, acted at the Bath, during the Residence of Queen Anne at that Place. At this Time it happen'd, that Mrs. Verbruggen, by reason of her last sickness (of which she some few Months after dy'd) was left in London; and though most of her Parts were of Course, to be dispos'd of, yet so earnest was the female Scramble for them, that only one of them fell o the Share of Mrs. Oldfield, that of Leonora, in Sir Courtly Nice; a Character of good plain Senfe, but ot over elegantly written. It was in this Part Mrs. Oldfield surprized me into an Opinion of her having ll the innate Powers of a good Actress, though they vere yet, but in the Bloom of what they promis'd. Before

176 The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c.

Before she had acted this Part, I had so cold an Expectation from her Abilities, that she could scarce prevail with me, to rehearse with her the Scenes, she was chiefly concern'd in, with Sir Courtly, which I then acted. However, we ran them over, with a mutual Inadvertency of one another. I feem'd carelefs, as concluding, that any Affistance I could give her, would be to little or no purpose, and she mutter'd out her Words in a fort of mifty manner, at my low Opinion of her. But when the Play came to be acted, fhe had a just Occasion to triumph over the Error of my Judgment by the (almost) Amazement that her unexpected Performance awak'd me to; fo forward, and fudden a Step into Nature, I had never feen; and what made her Performance more valuable, was, that I knew it all proceeded from her own Understanding, untaught, and unaffifted by any one more experienc'd Actor. Perhaps it may not be unacceptable, if I enlarge a little more upon the Theatrical Character of fo memorable an Actress.

Ô1

nu

Mi ver by ner

me er

of t ion

kno

whi

n.

han

Writ

heir

or le

In

ortu

hirty

never

n (1

o do

ad o

Though this Part of Leonora, in itself, was of fo little value, that when she grew more into Esteem, it was one of the feveral fhe gave away, to inferior Actreffes; yet it was the first (as I have observed) that corrected my Judgment of her, and confirm'd me, in a strong Belief, that she could not fail, in very little Time, of leing what she was afterwards allow'd to be the foremost Ornament of our Theatre. Upon this unexpected Sally, then, of the Power, and Disposition, of fo unforeseen an Actress, it was, that I again took up the two first Acts of the Careles Husband, which I had written the Summer before, and had thrown aside, in despair of having Justice done to the Character of Lady Betty Modifb, by any one Woman, then among us; Mrs. Verbruggen being now in a very declining state of Health, and Mrs. Bracegirale out of my Reach, and engag'd in another Company: But, as I have faid, Mrs. Oldfield having thrown out fuch new Proffers of a Genius, I was no longer at a Lou for Support; my Doubts were dispell'd, and I had now a new Call to finish it : Accordingly, the Care il as en ial

n-

be rds

er.

uft

nt,

er-

1 2

ade

it

ht,

19

ttle

ble

ffo

, it

Ac-

that

, in

ittle

be,

this

fiti-

gain

and,

had

the

nan,

very

at of

But,

fuch

Los

had

are

48

less Husband took its Fate upon the Stage, the Winter following, in 1704. Whatever favourable Reception, this Comedy has met with from the Publick; it would be unjust in me, not to place a large Share of it to the Account of Mrs. Oldfield; not only from the incommon Excellence of her Action; but even fromher personal Manner of Conversing. There are maby Sentiments in the Character of Lady Betty Mois, that I may almost say, were originally her own, or only dress'd with a little more Care, than when hey negligently fell, from her lively Humour : Had her Birth plac'd her in a higher Rank of Life, she had certainly appear'd, in reality, what in this Play she only excellently acted, an agreeably gay Woman of Quality, a little too confcious of her natural Attracions. I have often feen her in private Societies, where Women of the best Rank might have borrow'd ome part of her Behaviour, without the least Diminution of their Sense, or Dignity. And this very Morning, where I am now writing at the Bath, November 11, 1738, the same Words were said of her by a Lady of Condition, whose better Judgment of her personal Merit, in that Light, has embolden'd ne to repeat them. After her Success, in this Characer of higher Life; and all that Nature had given her of the Actress, seem'd to have risen to its full Perfection: But the Variety of her Power could not be known, 'till she was seen in variety of Characters; which, as fast as they fell to her, she equally excell'd n. Authors had much more from her Performance. han they had reason to hope for, from what they had written for her, and none had less than another, but as heir Genius in the Parts they allotted her, was more r less elevated.

In the wearing of her Person, she was particularly ortunate; her Figure was always improving, to her hirty-sixth Year; but her Excellence in acting was never at a stand: And the last new Character she shone in (Lady Townly) was a proof, that she was still able o do more, if more could have been done for ber. She ad one Mark of good Sense, rarely known in any

Actor

Actor of either Sex, but herself. I have observ'd fe veral, with promifing Dispositions, very desirous of Instruction at their first setting out; but no sooner had they found their least Account, in it, than they were, as defirous of being left to their own Capacity, which they, then, thought would be difgrac'd, by their feeming to want any farther Affistance. But this was not Mrs. Oldfield's Way of thinking; for to the last Year of her Life, the never undertook any Part the lik'd. without being importunately defirous of having all the Helps in it, that another could possibly give her. By knowing so much herself, she found how much more there was of Nature, yet needful to be known. Yet it was a hard Matter to give her any Hint, that she was not able to take, or improve. With all this Merit, fhe was tractable, and less prefuming in her Station, than several, that had not half her pretentions to be troublesome: But she lost nothing by her easy Conduct; she had every Thing she ask'd, which she took care should be always reasonable, because she hated as much to be grudg'd, as deny'd a Civility. Upon her extraordinary Action in the Provok'd Husband, the Managers made her a Prefent of fifty Guineas more than her Agreement, which never was more than a Verbal one; for they knew she was above deferting them, to engage upon any other Stage, and she was conscious, they would never think it their Interest, to give her cause of Complaint. In the last two Months of her Illness, when she was no longer able to affift them, she declin'd receiving her Salary, tho' by her Agreement, she was entitled to it. Upon the whole, the was, to the last Scene she acted, the Delight of her Spectators: Why then may we not close her Character, with the fame Indulgence with which Horace fpeaks of a commendable Poem:

Ubi plura nitent—non ego paucis Offendor maculis—

Where in the whole, such various Beauties shine, Twere idle, upon Errors, to refine.

What

0

0

0

01 po lia

de

fu

ly ra

qu

og fer

Au

of

Hu

ran

Ad

he

cou

on

ick

men

eft

he

any lifta

ette

fa

oot

as c

What more might be faid of her as an Actress, may be found in the Preface to the Provok'd Husband, to which I refer the Reader.

t

13

t,

n,

De l

nok

23

191

the 910 na

ing

Was.

, to

nths

affift

her

pole,

t of

Cha-

grace

What

With the Acquisition, then, of so advanc'd a Comedian as Mrs. Oldfield, and the Addition of one so much in favour as Wilks, and by the visible Improvement of our other Actors, as Penkethman, Johnson, Bullock, and I think I may venture to name my felf in the Number (but, in what Rank, I leave to the Judgment of those who have been my Spectators) the Reputation of our Company began to get ground; Mrs. Oldfield, and Wilks, by their frequently playing against one another, in our best Comedies, very happily supported that Humour and Vivacity, which is fo peculiar to our English Stage. The French, our only modem Competitors, feldom give us their Lovers, in fuch various Lights: In their Comedies (however lively a People they are by nature) their Lovers are generally constant simple Sighers, both of a Mind, and equally diffres'd, about the Difficulties of their coming logether; which naturally makes their Conversation for ferious, that they are feldom good Company to their Auditors: And tho' I allow them many other Beauties, of which we are too negligent; yet our Variety of Humour has Excellencies that all their valuable Obserrance of Rules have never yet attain'd to. By these Advantages, then, we began to have an equal Share of the politer Sort of Spectators, who, for feveral Years, fould not allow our Company to stand in any comparion with the other. But Theatrical Favour, like pubick Commerce, will fometimes deceive the best Judgments, by an unaccountable Change of its Channel; the eft Commodities are not always known to meet with he best Markets. To this Decline of the Old Comany, many Accidents might contribute; as the too istant Situation of their Theatre; or their want of a etter, for it was not, then, in the Condition it now ; but fmall, and poorly fitted up, within the Walls f a Tennis Quaree Court, which is of the leffer Sort. ooth, who was then a young Actor among them, as often told me of the Difficulties Betterton, then, labour'd labour'd under, and complain'd of: How impract cable he found it, to keep their Body to that comme Order, which was necessary for their Support; their relying too much upon their intrinfick Merit; an though but few of them were young, even when the first became their own Masters, yet they were all now, ten Years older, and consequently more liable to h into an inactive Negligence, or were only separate diligent, for themselves, in the sole Regard of their h nefit-Plays; which several of their Principals knew, worst, would raise them Contributions, that would me than tolerably fubfift them, for the current Year. B as these were too precarious Expedients, to be alway depending upon, and brought in nothing, to the gener Support of the Numbers, who are at Salaries und them; they were reduc'd to have recourse to foreign Novelties; L' Abbee, Balon, and Mademoiselle Subling three of the then, most famous Dancers of the Fra Opera, were, at several Times, brought over at extr ordinary Rates, to revive that fickly Appetite, who plain Sense, and Nature had satiated. But alas! the was no recovering to a found Constitution, by the mere coftly Cordials; the Novelty of a Dance, but of a thort Duration, and perhaps hurtful, in Consequence; for it made a Play, without a Dam less endur'd, than it had been before, when such D cing was not to be had. But perhaps, their exhibit ing these Novelties, might be owing to the Success had met with, in our more barbarous introducing French Mimicks, and Tumblers the Year before; which Mr. Rowe, thus complains in his Prologue one of his first Plays:

ed

tte

wa

h

d, r d

af

en;

Act

Rion A,

he la

bei

ha

Must Shakespear, Fletcher, and laborious Ben, Be left for Scaramouch, and Harlequin?

While the Crowd, therefore, fo fluctuated, from a House, to another, as their Eyes were more, or regaled, than their Ears, it could not be a Question main Debate, which had the better Actors; the Ma

acti-

mo

; and they now.

o fi

rate

ir Be

w,

Bu Bu

enen unde

oreig

Fran

whit

! the

the

e, in

Dan

n Da

xhib

cels 1

cing

ore;

gue

n, om (

of

n mu

feither, feem'd to be of little moment; and the Comlaint in the foregoing Lines, tho' it might be just, for time, could not be a just one for ever; because the best lay that ever was writ, may tire by being too often reated, a Misfortune naturally attending the Obligation. play every Day; not that whenever such Satiety comences, it will be any proof of the Play's being a bad e, or of its being ill acted in a Word, Satiety is dom enough confidered by either Criticks, Spectators. Actors, as the true, not to fay just, cause of declining diences, to the most rational Entertainments : And o' I cannot fay I ever faw a good new Play, not atnded with due Encouragement, yet to keep a Theadaily open, without fometimes giving the Publick bad old one, is more than I doubt, the Wit of hun Writers, or Excellence of Actors, will ever be e to accomplish. And as both Authors, and Comens, may have often succeeded, where a found Judgnt would have condemn'd them, it might puzzle nicest Critick living, to prove in what fort of Exence the true Value of either confished: For if ir Merit were to be measured by the full Houses, y may have brought; if the Judgment of the wd were infallible; I am afraid we shall be reed to allow, that the Beggars Opera was the best tten Play, and Sir Harry Wildair (as Wilks play'd was the best acted Part, that ever our English Thehad to boast of. That Critick indeed, must be d, to a Folly, that would deny either of them r due praise, when they severally drew such Numafter them; all their Hearers could not be mien; and yet, if they were all in the right, what of Fame will remain to those celebrated Authors, Actors, that had so long, and deservedly been aded, before these were in Being. The only Dition I shall make between them, is, That to write, ct, like the Authors, or Actors of the latter End he last Century, I am of Opinion, will be found better pretence to Success, than to imitate those have been so crowded to, in the Beginning of this. All I would infer from this Explanation, is that though we had then the better Audiences, an might have more of the young World on our Side yet this was no fure proof, that the other Company were not, in the Truth of Action, greatly our Super riors. These elder Actors, then, besides the Difat vantages I have mention'd, having only the fewer true Judges to admire them, naturally wanted the fun port of the Crowd, whose Taste was to be pleased a cheaper Rate, and with coarser Fare. To recover them therefore to their due Estimation, a new project was formed of building them a stately Theatre, in the Hay-Market, by Sir John Vanbrugh, for which he rais'd a Subscription of thirty Persons of Quality, a one hundred Pounds each, in Confideration where every Subscriber, for his own Life, was to be admitted, to whatever Entertainments should be publickly performed there, without farther payment for his En trance. Of this Theatre, I faw the first Stone laid on which was inscribed The little Whig, in Honour to a Lady of extraordinary Beauty, then the celebrand Toast, and pride of that Party.

In the Year 1706, when this House was finish Betterton, and his Co-partners dissolv'd their own A greement, and threw themselves under the Directions Sir John Vanbrugh and Mr. Congreve; imagining perhaps, that the Conduct of two fuch eminent At thors, might give a more prosperous Turn to the Condition; that the Plays, it would now be the Interest to write for them, would soon recover the Town to a true Tafte, and be an Advantage that I other Company could hope for; that in the Interim the fuch Plays could be written, the Grandeur of the House, as it was a new Spectacle, might allure the Crowd to support them: But if these were their View we shall see that their Dependance upon them was to fanguine. As to their prospect of new Plays, I dou it was not enough confidered, that good ones we plants of a flow Growth; and though Sir John Va brugh had a very quick Pen, yet Mr. Congreve w too judicicus a Writer, to let any thing come hathi

a

n

i

ch

ſe

ijb ets

ds (

o fi

Ci

To

and

ide

pany

upe ifad

Wet,

fup.

ed at

COVE

n the

ty, 2

nereo

dmit-

lickly

is En-

e laid

our to

brate

nish'd

wn A

tion

gining

nt Au

e the

ver th

hat n

rim ti

of the

ure th

View

was to

I doub

es we

bn Va

e haffili

nt of his Hands: As to their other Dependance, the oufe, they had not yet discover'd, that almost every oper Quality, and Convenience of a good Theatre d been facrificed or neglected, to shew the Spectar a vast, triumphal piece of Architecture! And at the best Play, for the Reasons I am going to of-, could not but be under greater Disadvantages, and less capable of delighting the Auditor, here, than it ald have been in the plain Theatre they came from. what could their vast Columns, their gilded Cores, their immoderate high Roofs avail, when scarce e Word in ten, could be distinctly heard in it? Nor d it then, the Form it now stands in, which Nelity, two or three Years after reduced it to ? At the opening it, the flat Cieling, that is now over the chestre, was then a Semi-oval Arch, that sprung. en Feet higher from above the Cornice: The ling over the Pit too, was still more raised, being level Line from the highest back part of the upper llery, to the Front of the Stage: The Front-boxes e a continued Semicircle, to the bare Walls of the use on each fide: This extraordinary and superfluspace occasioned such an Undulation, from the Voice every Actor, that generally what they faid founded the Gabbling of fo many People, in the lofty Isles Cathedral—The Tone of a Trumpet, or the Swell an Eunuch's holding Note, 'tis true, might be eten'd, by it; but the articulate founds of a speak. Voice were drown'd, by the hollow Reverberations ne Word upon another. To this Inconvenience, may we not add that of its fituation; for at that it had not the Advantage of almost a large City, th has fince been built, in its Neighbourhood: le costly Spaces of Hanover, Grofvenor, and Ca-My Squares, with the many, and great adjacent ets about them, were then all but so many green is of Pasture, from whence they could draw little fustenance, unless it were that of a Milk Diet. City, the Inns of Court, and the middle part of Town, which were the more constant support R 2 of a Theatre, and chiefly to be rely'd on, were now, too far, out of the Reach of an eafy Walk; and Coach. hire is often too hard a Tax, upon the Pit and Gal. lery. But from the vast Increase of the Buildings have mention'd, the Situation of that Theatre has fine that Time received confiderable Advantages; a new World of People of Condition are nearer to it than formerly, and I am of Opinion, that if the Auditor, part were a little more reduced to the Model of that in Drury-Lane, an excellent Company of Actors would now, find a better Account in it, than in any other House in this populous City: Let me not be mistaken. I fay, an excellent Company, and fuch as might be able to do Justice to the best of Plays, and throw out those latent Beauties in them, which only excellent Actors can discover, and give Life to. If such a Company were now there, they would meet with a quite diff ferent fet of Auditors, than other Theatres have lately been us'd to: Polite Hearers would be content with polite Entertainments: and I remember the time when Plays, without the Aid of Farce, or Pantomine, were as decently attended as Opera's, or private Assemblia where a noify Sloven would have passed his time as us Paniy in a Front box, as in a Drawing-room; who a Hat upon a Man's Head there would have been look upon, as a fure Mark of a Brute, or a Booby: Buto all this I have feen too, the Reverse, where in the pro fence of Ladies, at a Play, common Civility has been a at Defiance, and the privilege of being a rude Clow even to a Nusance, has, in a manner been demanded as one of the Rights of English Liberty: Now, though I grant, that Liberty is fo precious a Jewel, that ought not to suffer the least Ray of its Lustre to diminish'd; yet methinks the Liberty of seeing Play, in quiet, has as laudable a Claim to Protection as the privilege of not fuffering you to do it, has Impunity. But fince we are so happy, as not to he a certain Power among us, which, in another Com try is called the Police, let us rather bear this fult, than buy its Remedy at too dear a Rate;

01

T

th:

me fin

wa

001

Tur

Ch

Th

tane

follo

of t

T

y, heir

bera,

but t

her

had l

Days

Failu

his C

mpro

Thou

let it be the punishment of such wrong-headed Savages, that they never will, or can know the true Value of that Liberty, which they so stupidly abuse: Such vulgar Minds possess their Liberty, as profligate Husbands do sine Wives, only to disgrace them. In a Word, when Liberty boils over, such is the scum of it. But to our new erested Theatre.

ow,

ach-

Gal.

gs I

ince

new

than tory

that

ould,

the

ken,

at be

V OU

llent

Come dif

late-

with

when

Were

blies

is un-

wha

ook'

But o

e pro

enid

low

nded

loug

at W

to I

ing

ctio

128

ha

Com

is l

; 2

Not long before this Time, the Italian Opera began first to steal into England; but in as rude a Difguife, and unlike itself, as possible; in a lame, hobing Translation into our own Language, with falle Quantities, or Metre out of Measure, to its original Notes, fung by our own unskilful Voices, with Graces misapply'd to almost every sentiment, and with Action, lifeless and unmeaning, through every Character: The first Italian Performer that made any distinguish'd Figure in it, was Valentini, a true sensible Singer, at that time, but of a Throat too weak to fustain those melodious Warblings, for which the fairer Sex have fince idoliz'd his Successors. However, this Defect was fo well supply'd by his Action, that his Hearers fore with the Absurdity of his finging his first part of furnus in Camilla, all in Italian, while every other Character was fung and recited to him in English. This I have mentioned to flew not only our Tramonane Taste, but that the crowded Audiences, which follow'd it to Drury-Lane, might be another Occasion of their growing thinner in Lincolns-Inn-Fields.

To strike in, therefore, with this prevailing Novelty, Sir John Vanbrugh, and Mr. Congreve, open'd their new Hay-Market Theatre, with a translated Opera, to Italian Musick, call'd the Triumph of Love, but this not having in it the Charms of Camilla, either from the Inequality of the Musick or Voices, and but a cold Reception, being perform'd but three Days, and those not crowded. Immediately upon the Sailure of this Opera, Sir John Vanbrugh produc'd his Comedy, call'd the Confederacy, taken (but greatly improv'd) from the Bourgeois à la mode of Dancour? Though the Fate of this Play was something better, yet I thought, it was not equal to its Merit : For it is written with an uncommon Vein of Wit and Humour: which confirms me in my former Observation, that the Difficulty of hearing diffinctly in that, then wide The atre, was no fmall Impediment to the Applause that might have follow'd the same Actors in it, upon any other Stage, and indeed every Play acted there, be fore the House was alter'd, seem'd to suffer from the fame Inconvenience: In a Word, the prospect of Profits, from this Theatre was so very barren, that Mr. Congreve in a few Months gave up his Share and Interest in the Government of it, wholly to Sir John Vanbrugh. But Sir John being fole Proprietor of the House, was, at all Events, oblig'd to do his utmost to support it. As he had a happier Talent of throwing the English Spirit into his Translation of French Plays, than any former Author, who had borrow'd from them, he, in the same Season, gave the Publick three more of that Kind, call'd the Cucholl in Conceit; from the Cocu imaginaire of Moliere; Squire Treelooby, from his Monsieur de Pourceaugnas, and the Mistake, from the D'epit Amoureux of the fame Author. Yet all these, however well executed, came to the Ear in the same undistinguish'd Utterance by which almost all their Plays had equally suffered; For what few could plainly hear, it was not likely great many could applaud.

R 3

ci

i

8

ha

an er er

eil

lou

ut rta

I

qu

Sin

W

; h e m fon

Co

e ei

Pl

have

It must farther be considered too, that this Compa my were not now what they had been, when they first revolted from the Patentees in Drury-Lane, and became their own Masters in Lincolns-Inn-Fields. Se veral of them, excellent in their different Talents were now dead; as Smith, Kynaston, Sundford, and Leigh: Mrs. Betterton, and Underhill being, at this time, also superannuated Pensioners, whose places were generally but ill supplied: Nor could it be a pected that Betterton himself, at past seventy, could retain his former Force and Spirit; though he was yet far distant from any Competitor. Thus then wer these Remains of the best Set of Actors, that I believe were

Master

were ever known, at once, in England; by Time. Death, and the Satiety of their Hearers mould'ring to decay. - and side ade

1

E;

ne-

nat

my

be

the

of

that hare

Sir

etor

his

nt of

n of bor-

the

eckold

liere;

ugnac, f the

cuted,

rance,

ered:

kely a

ompa-1 they

e, and . Se

'alents

d, and at this place

be excould

ne was

n were believe

Were

It was now the Town-talk, that nothing but a Union of the two Companies could recover the Stage, to its former Reputation, which Opinion was certainly true : One would have thought too, that the Patentee of Drury-Lane could not have fail'd to close with it, he being then, on the prosperous Side of the Question, having no Relief to alk for himself, and little more to do in the Matter, than to consider what he might fafely grant: But it feems this was not his way of counting: He had other Persons, who had reat Claims to Shares, in the Profits of this Stage. which Profits, by a Union, he foresaw would be too ifible, to be doubted of, and might raise up a new spirit, in those Adventurers, to revive their Suits at law with him; for he had led them a Chace in chancery feveral Years, and when they had driven im, into a Contempt of that Court, he conjur'd up Spirit, in the Shape of fix and eight Pence a-day, hat constantly struck the Tipstaff blind, whenever he ame near him: He knew the intrinfick Value of Dey, and was refolv'd to flick to it, as the furest give the Plaintiffs enough on't. And by this Ex ient our good Master had long walk'd about, at his eisure, cool, and contented, as a Fox, when the lounds were drawn off, and gone home from him. ut whether I am right, or not, in my Conjectures, rtain it is, that this close Master of Drury-Lane, had Inclination to a Union, as will appear by the quel:

Sir John Vanburgh knew too, that to make a Uniworth his while, he must not seem too hasty for ; he therefore found himself under a Necessity, in e mean Time of letting his whole Theatrical Farm some industrious Tenant, that might put it into bet-Condition. This is that Crisis, as I observ'd, in eighth Chapter, when the Royal License, for act-Plays, &c. was judg'd of so little Value, as not have one Suitor for it. At this Time then, the Master of Drury-Lane happen'd to have a Sort of primier Agent in his Stage-Affairs, that feem'd in Ap. pearance as much to govern the Master, as the Ma. fter himself did to govern his Actors : But this Person was under no Stipulation, or Salary, for the Service he render'd; but had gradually wrought himself into the Master's extraordinary Confidence, and Trust. from an habitual Intimacy, a cheerful Humour, and an indefatigable Zeal for his Interest. If I should farther fay, that this Perfon has been well known in almost every Metropolis in Europe; that few private Men have, with fo little Reproach, run through more various Turns of Fortune; that on the wrong Side of Three-score, he has yet the open Spirit of a hale young Fellow of five and twenty; that though he still chuses to speak what he thinks, to his best Friends, with an undifguis'd Freedom, he is, notwithflanding acceptable to many Persons of the first Rank, and Condition; that any one of them (provided he likes them) may now fend him, for their Service, to Conflantinople, at half a Day's Warning; that Time has not yet, been able to make a visible Change, in any Part of him, but the Colour of his Hair, from a ce coal-black, to that of a milder milk-white:

When I have taken this Liberty with him, methinks it cannot be taking a much greater, if I at once should tell you, that this Person was Mr. Owen Swiney, and that it was to him Sir John Vanbrugh, in this Exigence of his Theatrical Affairs, made an Offer of his Actors, under fuch Agreements of Salary, as might be made with them; and of his House, Cloaths, and Scenes, with the Queen's License to employ them, upon Payment of only the casual Rent of five Pounds upon every acting Day, and not to exceed 700 l. is the Year. Of this Proposal, Mr. Swiney desir'd Day, or two to confider; for however he might like it, he would not meddle in any fort, without the Confent, and Approbation of his Friend, and Patron, the Master of Drury-Lane. Having given the Reasons why this Patentee was averse to a Union, it may now seen less a Wonder, why he immediately consented that Squine

e

h

th

th

21

Th

in ( a Le

m t

not I wa

confi

m

CO

te

nd

ıld

in

ate

igh

ong

fa

ugh

best

ith-

ink,

he

, to ime

, 11

om 2

ite:

inks

iould

and

Exi

of his

, and

them.

ounds, ir'd a

t like

e Con-

n, the

w feen

d that

Sauthe

Swiney should take the Hay-Market House, &c. and continue that Company to act against him; but the real Truth was, that he had a Mind both Companies should be clandestinely under one, and the same Interest; and yet in so loose a Manner, that he might declare his Verbal Agreement with Swiney good, or null, and void, as he might best find his Account in either. What flatter'd him, that he had this wholesome Project, and Saviney to execute it, both in his Power, was, that at this Time, Swiney happen'd to fland in his Books, Debtor to Cash, upwards of two hundred Pounds: But here, we shall find, he overrated his Security. However Swiney as yet follow'd his Orders; he took the Hay-Market Theatre, and had farther, the private Consent of the Patentee, to take such of his Actors from Drury-Lane, as either from Inclination or Discontent, might be willing to come over to him, in the Hay-Market. The only one he made an Exception of, was my felf: For tho' he chiefly depended upon his Singers, and Dancers, he faid, it would be necessary to keep some one tolerable After with him, that might enable him to fet those Machines a going. Under this Limitation, of not entertaining me, Swiney seem'd to acquiesce, 'till after he had open'd, with the fo recruited Company in the Hay-Market: the Actors that came to him from Dru-17-Lane, where Wilks, Estcourt, Mills, Keen, Johnson, Bullock, Mrs. Oldfield, Mrs. Rogers, and some few others of less note: But I must here let you know, that this Project was form'd, and put in Execution, all in a very few Days, in the Summer-Season, when no Theatre was open, To all which I was entirely a Stranger, being at this Time at a Gentleman's House in Gloucestersbire, scribbling, if I mistake not, the Wife's Resentment.

The first Word I heard of this Transaction, was by a Letter from Swiney, inviting me, to make One in the Hay-Market Company, whom he hop'd I could not but now think the stronger Party. But, I confess, I was not a little alarm'd, at this Revolution: For I consider'd, that I knew of no visible Fund to support

Master of Drury-Lane happen'd to have a Sort of primier Agent in his Stage-Affairs, that feem'd in Ap. pearance as much to govern the Master, as the Ma. fter himself did to govern his Actors : But this Person was under no Stipulation, or Salary, for the Service he render'd; but had gradually wrought himself into the Master's extraordinary Confidence, and Trust. from an habitual Intimacy, a cheerful Humour, and an indefatigable Zeal for his Interest. If I should farther fay, that this Perfon has been well known in almost every Metropolis in Europe; that few private Men have, with fo little Reproach, run through more various Turns of Fortune; that on the wrong Side of Three-score, he has yet the open Spirit of a hale young Fellow of five and twenty; that though he still chuses to speak what he thinks, to his best Friends, with an undifguis'd Freedom, he is, notwithflanding acceptable to many Persons of the first Rank, and Condition; that any one of them (provided he likes them) may now fend him, for their Service, to Constantinople, at half a Day's Warning; that Time has not yet, been able to make a visible Change, in any Part of him, but the Colour of his Hair, from a ce coal-black, to that of a milder milk-white: When I have taken this Liberty with him, methinks it cannot be taking a much greater, if I at once should tell you, that this Person was Mr. Owen Squiney, and that it was to him Sir John Vanbrugh, in this Exigence of his Theatrical Affairs, made an Offer of his Actors, under fuch Agreements of Salary, as might be made with them; and of his House, Cloaths, and Scenes, with the Queen's License to employ them, upon Payment of only the casual Rent of five Pounds upon every acting Day, and not to exceed 700 l. is the Year. Of this Proposal, Mr. Swiney desir'd Day, or two to confider; for however he might like it, he would not meddle in any fort, without the Confent, and Approbation of his Friend, and Patron, the Mafter of Drury-Lane. Having given the Reasons why this Patentee was averse to a Union, it may now seen less a Wonder, why he immediately consented that Swine

e

h

H

Bi

2 V Th

Str

in (

a Le

m t

not I I wa

confi

n

.

to ld

ite

gh

ng

fa

igh

best

th-

nk,

he

, to ime, in

m 2

ite:

inks ould

and Exi-

f his

night

, and

them,

L. H

ir'd a

t like

Con

n, the

w feen

d tha

Squine

Swiney should take the Hay-Market House, &c. and continue that Company to act against him; but the real Truth was, that he had a Mind both Companies should be clandestinely under one, and the same Interest; and yet in so loose a Manner, that he might declare his Verbal Agreement with Swiney good, or null, and void, as he might best find his Account in either. What flatter'd him, that he had this wholesome Project, and Swiney to execute it, both in his Power, was, that at this Time, Swiney happen'd to fland in his Books, Debtor to Cash, upwards of two hundred Pounds: But here, we shall find, he overrated his Security. However Swiney as yet follow'd his Orders; he took the Hay-Market Theatre, and had farther, the private Consent of the Patentee, to take such of his Actors from Drury-Lane, as either from Inclination or Discontent, might be willing to come over to him, in the Hay-Market. The only one he made an Exception of, was my felf: For tho' he chiefly depended upon his Singers, and Dancers, he faid, it would be necessary to keep some one tolerable Actor with him, that might enable him to fet those Machines a going. Under this Limitation, of not entertaining me, Swiney seem'd to acquiesce, 'till after he had open'd, with the so recruited Company in the Hay-Market: the Actors that came to him from Drury-Lane, where Wilks, Estcourt, Mills, Keen, Johnson, Bullock, Mrs. Oldfield, Mrs. Rogers, and some few others of less note: But I must here let you know, that this Project was form'd, and put in Execution, all in a very few Days, in the Summer-Season, when no Theatre was open, To all which I was entirely a Stranger, being at this Time at a Gentleman's House in Gloucestersbire, scribbling, if I mistake not, the Wife's Resentment.

The first Word I heard of this Transaction, was by a Letter from Swiney, inviting me, to make One in the Hay-Market Company, whom he hop'd I could not but now think the stronger Party. But, I confess, I was not a little alarm'd, at this Revolution: For I consider'd, that I knew of no visible Fund to support

theie

these Actors, but their own Industry; that all his Recruits from Drury-Lane would want new Cloathing; and that the warmest Industry would be always labouring up Hill, under so necessary an Expence, so bad a Situation, and so inconvenient a Theatre. I was always of Opinion too, that in changing Sides, in most Conditions, there generally were discovered more unforeseen Inconveniencies, than visible Advantages; and that at worst, there would always some fort of Merit remain with Fidelity, tho' unfuccessful. Upon these Considerations, I was only thankful for the Offers made me, from the Hay-Market, without accepting them; and foon after came to Town towards the usual Time of their Beginning to act, to offer my Service to our old Master. But I found our Company fo thinn'd, that it was almost impracticable, to bring any one tolerable Play upon the Stage. When I ask'd him, where were his Actors, and in what manner he intended to proceed? he reply'd, Don't you trouble your felf, come along, and Ill show you. He then led me about all the By-places in the House, and shew'd me fifty little Back-doors, dark Closets and narrow, Passages, in Alterations and Contrivances of which Kind he had busied his Head, most Part of the Vacation; for he was scarce ever, without some notable Joyner, or a Bricklayer extraordinary, in pay, for twenty Years. And there are fo many odd obscure Places about a Theatre, that his Genius in Nook-building was never out of Employment; nor could the most vain-headed Author, be more deaf to an Interruption in reciting his Works, than our wife Master was while entertaining me with the Improvements he had made in his invisible Architecture; all which, without thinking any one Part of it necessary ; tho' I feem'd to approve, I could not help, now and then, breaking in upon his Delight, with the impertinent Queltion of ____But, Mafter, where are your Actors! But it feems I had taken a wrong Time for this fort of Enquiry; his Head was full of Matters of more moment (and, as you find) I was to come another Time for an Answer: A very hopeful Condition I found

B 25

t

t

2 hic

at

da

ul

18.

m

6-

;

2-

6

725

in 310

es;

of

non

Of-

ep-

ards

my

ipa-

, to

hen

nan-

1 90%

He

and

and

es of

f the

nota-

, for

Scure

build-

e most

ption

was

e had

witheem'd

break.

Quel-

Etors !

fort of

more

nother ndition I found

I found myself in, under the Conduct of so profound a Vertuoso, and so confiderate a Master ! But, to speak of him feriously, and to account for this Difregard to his Actors, his Notion was, that finging, and dancing, or any fort of exotick Entertainments, would make an ordinary Company of Actors too hard, for the best Set, who had only plain Plays to subsist on. Now, tho' I am afraid too much might be faid, in fayour of this Opinion, yet I thought he laid more Stress mon that Sort of Merit, than it would bear; as I, herefore found myfelf of fo little Value with him. I could not help fetting a little more upon myfelf, and was refolved to come to a short Explanation with him. told him, I came to ferve him, at a Time, when nany of his best Actors had deserted him; that he night now have the Refusal of me; but I could not ford to carry the Compliment fo far, as to lessen my ncome by it; that I therefore expected, either my asual Pay to be advanced, or the Payment of my ormer Salary made certain, for as many Days, as e had acted the Year before. —— No, he was not illing to alter his former Method; but I might chuse hatever Parts I had a Mind to act, of theirs who d left him. When I found him, as I thought, fo fensible, or impregnable, I look'd gravely in his ice, and told him—He knew upon what Terms, I as willing to ferve him; and took my leave. By is Time, the Hay Market Company had begun actg, to Audiences fomething better than usual, and ere all paid their full Salaries, a Bleffing they had t felt, in some Years, in either House before. Upthis Success, Swiney press'd the Patentee to execute Articles they had as yet only verbally agreed on, hich were in Substance, That Swiney should take Hay-Market House in his own Name, and have at Actors he thought necessary from Drury-Lane, after all Payments punctually made, the Profits uld be equally divided between these two Undertas. But fost, and fair! Rashness was a Fault, that never yet been imputed to the Patentee; certain ments were Methods he had not of a long, long Time been us'd to; that Point still wanted Time for Consideration, But Swiney was as hasty, as the other was flow, and was refolv'd to know what he had to trust to, before they parted; and to keep him the closer, to his Bargain, he stood upon his Right of having Me added to that Company, if I was willing to come into it. But this was a Point as absolutely me fus'd on one Side, as infifted on, on the other. I this Contest, high Words were exchang'd on both Sides, 'till, in the End, this their last private Meeting came to an open Rupture: But before it was publical known, Swiney, by fairly letting me into the whole Transaction, took effectual Means to secure me in hi Interest. When the Mystery of the Patentee's Indiffe rence to me was unfolded, and that his flighting me was owing, to the Security he rely'd on, of Swing not daring to engage me, I could have no further De bate with myself, which side of the Question I should adhere to. To conclude, I agreed, in two Words, act with Saviney; and from this Time, every Chang that happen'd in the Theatrical Government, was nearer Step to that twenty Years of Prosperity, which Actors, under the Management of Actors, not los afterwards enjoy'd. What was the immediate Co fequence of this last Desertion from Drury-Lane, sta be the Subject of another Chapter.

han faithre sannaigh staithaid staigheal a teachair mulat mpromise a taigh bir fa in to meet the second selection of the belong the second s edit Livery up to 100% garring?

Janker Courtey Decreal Society of the statement and thouse upon parts of the Market and the state of the state of

t

It

A

iri ngo t b

ai

me

bo

ige I P

no

rov

labo

H

ty o

CHAP. X.

The recruited Actors, in the Hay-Market, encouraged by a Subscription. Drury Lane, under a particular Management. The Power of a Lord-Chamberlain, over the Ibeatres, consider d. How it had been formerly exercised. A Digression to Tragick Authors.

In La

rckly whole n hi

diffeg me, winey er Deshould rds, to Change was which ot loss

e Co

AVING shewn the particular Conduct of the Patentee, in refuling so fair an Opportunity of securing to himself both Companies, under is sole Power, and Interest: I shall now lead the eader, after a short View of what pass d in this new stablishment of the Hay Market Theatre, to the ceidents, that the Year following, compelled the me Patentee, to receive both Companies, united, in the Druy-Lane Theatre, notwithstanding his Disinnation to it.

It may, now, be imagin'd, that such a Detachment Actors, from Drury Lane, could not but give a new wint to those in the Hay-Market; not only by enang them to act each others Plays to better advantage; to an emulous Industry, which had lain too long clive among them, and without which they plainly they could not be sure of Subsistence. Plays, this means began to recover a good Share of their mer Esteem, and Favour; and the Profits of them, about a Month, enabled our new Manager to distinge his Debt (of something more than two hundred his Debt (of something more than two hundred him, and his Troop, in trust, to fight rown Battles. The greatest Inconvenience they labour'd under, was the immoderate Wideness of thouse; in which, as I have observed, the Distry of Hearing, may be said to have bury'd half the Auditors Entertainment. This Defect feem'd evident, from the much better Reception several new Plays (first acted there) met with when they afterwards came to be played by the same Actors, in Drury-Lan: Of this Number were the Stratagem; and the Wife's Resentment; to which I may add, the Double Gallant, This last, was a Play made up of what little was tolerable, in two, or three others, that had no Success and were laid afide, as so much Poetical Lumber; but by collecting and adapting the best Parts of 'em all, into one Play, the Double Gallant has had a Place, even Winter, amongst the publick Entertainments, the thirty Years. As I was only the Compiler of this Piece, I did not publish it in my own Name; but a my having but a Hand in it, could not be long a & cret. I have been often treated as a Plagiary on that Ao count : Not that I think I have any Right to complain, of whatever would detract from the Merital that fort of Labour; yet, a Cobler may be allow'd in be useful, though he is not famous: And I hope a Man is not blameable for doing a little Good, tho' he can not do as much as another? But so it is ____ Twopenny Criticks must live, as well as Eighteenpenny As thors!

While the Stage was thus recovering its former Strength, a more honourable Mark of Favour wa shewn to it, than it was ever known before, or fince have receiv'd. The, then, Lord Hallifax, was m only the Patron of the Men of Genius of this Time but had likewise a generous Concern for the Reputat on, and Prosperity of the Theatre, from whence the most elegant Dramatick Labours of the Learned, knew, had often shone in their brightest Lustre. Proposal therefore was drawn up, and address'd that Noble Lord for his Approbation, and Affiftance, raise a publick Subscription for reviving three Plays the best Authors, with the full Strength of the Com pany; every Subscriber to have three Tickets, the first Day of each Play, for his single Payment three Guineas. This Subscription his Lordship zealously encourag'd, that from his Recommendation chiefly chiefly, in a very little Time, it was compleated. The Plays were Julius Cæsar of Shakespear; the King and no King of Fletcher; and the Comick Scenes of Dryden's Marriage à la mode, and of his Maiden Queen put together, for it was judg'd, that as these comic Episodes were utterly independent of the serious Scenes, they were originally written to, they might on this Occasion be as well Episodes either to the other, and so make up five livelier Acts between them: At least the Project so well succeeded, that those comic Parts have never since been replac'd, but were continu'd to be jointly acted, as one Play, several Years after.

By the Aid of this Subscription, which happen'd in 1707, and by the additional Strength, and Industry of this Company, not only the Actors, (several of which were handsomely advanc'd, in their Salaries) were duly paid, but the Manager himself too, at the Foot of his Account flood a confiderable Gainer.

1-

W

rds

ne:

fe's

ant.

to-

cess,

but

, in-

every thele

this

ut a

a So

at Ac

COM-erit a

w'd to a Man

e can-

openny

y Au

former

our wa

fince to

was m s Time

Reputati

nence th

ustre.

dress'd

listance,

e Plays

the Com

ckets, ayment (

ordship!

mendation

At the same Time, the Patentee of Drury-Lane went on in his usual Method of paying extraordinary Prices to Singers, Dancers, and other exotick Performers, which were as constantly deducted out of the finkng Salaries of his Actors: 'Tis true his Actors, peraps, might not deferve much more, than he gave hem; yet, by what I have related, it is plain he chose ot to be troubled with such, as visibly had deserved nore: For it feems he had not purchas'd his share of he Patent, to mend the Stage, but to make Money of : And to fay Truth, his Sense of every Thing to be ewn there, was much upon a Level, with the Tafte the Multitude, whose Opinion, and whose Money eigh'd with him full as much, as that of the best ldges. His Point was to please the Majority, who, uld more easily comprehend any Thing they face; an the daintiest Things, that could be said to them. t in this Notion he kept no medium; for in my Mebry, he carry'd it so far, that he was some few ars before this Time) actually dealing for an extraorlary large Elephant, at a certain Sum, for every y he might think fit to shew the tractable Genius

S 2

of

had ever yet rais'd them to.

About the fame Time of his being under this Difap. pointment, he put in practice another Project of a new, though not of fo bold a Nature; which was his introducing a Set of Rope-dancers, into the fame Theatre; for the first Day of whose Performance, he had given out some Play, in which, I had a material Part: But I was hardy enough to go into the Pit, and acquainted the Spectators near me, that I hop'd, they would not think it a Mark of my Difrespect to them, if I declin'd acting upon any Stage, that was brought to fo low a Difgrace, as ours was like to be by that Day's Entertainment. My Excuse was so well taken, that I never after found any ill Confequences, or head of the least Disapprobation of it; and the whole Body of Actors too, protesting against such an Abuse of their Profession, our cautious Master was too much a larm'd, and intimidated to repeat it.

After what I have faid, it will be no Wonder, that all due Regards to the original Use, and Institution of the Stage, should be utterly lost, or neglected: Now was the Conduct of this Manager easily to be alterd while he had sound the Secret of making Money, out of Disorder and Confusion: For however strange it may seem, I have often observed him inclined to be chearful, in the Distresses of his Theatrical Affair, and equally reserved and pensive, when they were smoothly forward with a visible Profit. Upon a Ru of good Audiences, he was more frighted to be thought a Gainer, which might make him accountable to thers, than he was dejected with bad Houses, which

hfi

I

W

rol

in

ut

ad

ng

gh

the

eful

run

ters

lap-

f as

s his hea-

had

Part:

d ac-

they

them,

ought

y Chat

taken,

heard

Body

ouse of

uch a-

er, that

tion of : No

alter'd

ey, ou

range 1

d to be Affairs

ey west a Ru

though

ble too

s, who

at worst, he knew would make others accountable to him: And as, upon a moderate Computation, it cannot be suppos'd, that the contested Accounts of a twenty Years Wear and Tare, in a Play-house, could be fairly adjusted by a Master in Chancery, under four-score Years more, it will be no Surprize, that by the Neglect, or rather the Discretion of other Proprietors, in not browing away good Money after bad, this Hero of a Manager, who alone supported the War, should in Time so fortify himself by Delay, and so tire his Enenies, that he became sole Monarch of his Theatrical Empire, and left the quiet Possession of it, to his Sucteflors,

If these Facts seem too trivial for the Attention of a enfible Reader, let it be confider'd, that they are not hosen Fictions, to entertain, but Truths necessary to form him, under what low Shifts, and Difgraces, what Disorders and Revolutions the Stage labour'd, efore it could recover that Strength and Reputation, wherewith it began to flourish, towards the latter End f Queen Anne's Reign; and which it continu'd to njoy, for a Course of twenty Years following. But etus resume our Account of the new Settlement, ne Hay-Market.

It may be a natural Question, why the Actors, shom Saviney brought over to his Undertaking; in he Hay-Market, would tie themselves down to limited alaries? for though he, as their Manager was oblig'd: make them certain Payments, it was not certain. hat the Receipts would enable him to do it; and fince heir own Industry was the only visible Fund they had depend upon, why would they not, for that Reason, fift upon their being Sharers as well of possible Pros, as Losses? How far in this Point, they acted ght, or wrong, will appear from the following State their Cafe.

It must first be consider'd, that this Scheme of their? esertion, was all concerted, and put in Execution in Week's Time, which foot warning might make em overlook that Circumstance, and the sudden rospect of being deliver'd from having seldom

S 3

more.

198 The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c.

more, than half their Pay, was a Contentment that had bounded all their farther Views. Besides, as there could be no room to doubt of their receiving their fall Pay, previous to any profits, that might be reap'd by their Labour, and as they had no great Reason to anprehend those profits could exceed their respective Sa. laries, fo far as to make them repine at them, they might think it but reasonable, to let the Chance of any extraordinary Gain to be on the Side of their Lea. der, and Director. But farther, as this Scheme had the Approbation of the Court, these Actors, in reality, had it not, in their Power to alter any Part of it : And what induc'd the Court to encourage it, was, that by having the Theatre, and its Manager more immediately dependent on the Power of the Lord Chamberlain, it was not doubted but the Stage would be recovered into such a Reputation, as might now do Honour, to that absolute Command, which the Court, or its Officers feem'd always fond of having over it.

Here, to set the Constitution of the Stage in a clear Light, it may not be amis, to look back a little on the Power of a Lord Chamberlain, which, as may have been observed, in all Changes of the Theatrical Government, has been the main Spring, without which no Scheme, of what kind soever, could be set in Motion. My Intent is not to enquire how far, by Law, this Power has been limited, or extended,; but merely as an Historian, to relate Facts, to gratify the Curious, and then leave them to their own Reflections: This, too, I am the more inclined to, because there is no one Circumstance, which has affected the Stage, wherein so many Spectators, from those of the highest Rank, to the Vulgar, have seem'd more positively knowing, or less inform'd in.

Though in all the Letters Patent, for acting Plays, &c. fince K. Charles the First's Time, there has been no mention of the Lord Chamberlain, or of any Subordination to his Command, or Authority—yet it was still taken for granted, that no Letters Patent, by

Po

abr

law

cen

free

a P

from men

Que

rity,

ing i

beft

Shell

lain,

and ;

ever

Year

fhall

was e

Cogni

or Atri

them afign'

vels; Plays,

lenced

that co

of the

which

by an (Reason of thos

that the

hesh in ribly in

W

the bare Omiffion of fuch a great Officer's Name, could have fuperfeded, or taken out of his filands, that Power, which Time out of mind, he always had exercis'd over the Theatre. The common Opinions the abroad were, that if the Profession of Adors was unlawful, it was not in the Power of the Crown to license it; and, if it were not unlawful, it ought to be free, and independent, as other Professions; and that a Patent to exercise it, was only an honorary Favour. from the Crown, to give it a better Grace of Recommendation to the Publick. But as the Truth of this Question feem'd to be wrapt in a great deal of Obscurity, in the old Laws made in former Reigns, relating to Players, &c. it may be no Wonder, that the bet Companies of Actors thould be defirous of taking Shelter under the visible Power of a Lord Chamberlain, who they knew had, at his Pleafure, favourd. and protected, or born hard upon them : But be all this as it may, a Lord Chamberlain (from whencefoever his Power might be deriv'd) had, tilt of later Years, had always an implicit Obedience paid to it : I hall now give fome few Inflances, in what manner it was exercis'd.

What appear'd to be most reasonable, under his Cognizance was the licenting, or refuting new Plays. or firiking out what might be thought offenfive in them: Which Province had been, for many Years. affign'd to his inferior Officer, the Master of the Rerels; yet was not this License irrevocable; for several Plays, though acted, by that Permission, had been filenced afterwards. The first Instance of this Kind. that common Fame has delivered down to us, is that of the Maid's Tragedy of Beaumont and Fletcher. which was forbid in King Charles the Second's Time, by an Order from the Lord Chamberlain. For what Reason this Interdiction was laid upon it, the Politicks. of those Days, have only left us to guess. Some faid, that the killing of the King, in that Play, while the ragical Death of King Charles the First, was then so helh in People's Memory, was an Object too horribly impious, for a publick Entertainment. What makes

0

n

).

15 17

e

makes this Conjecture feem to have fome Foundation. is that the celebrated Waller, in Compliment to that Court, alter'd the last Act of this Play (which is printed at the End of his Works) and gave it a new Catastrophe, wherein the Life of the King is loyally fav'd, and the Lady's Matter made up, with a less terrible Reparation. Others have given out, that a repenting Mistress, in a romantick Revenge of her Dishonour, killing the King, in the very Bed he expected her to come into, was shewing a too dangerous Exam. ple to other Evadnes, then shining at Court, in the fame Rank of Royal Distinction; who, if ever their Consciences should have run equally mad, might have had frequent Opportunities of putting the Expiation of their Frailty, into the like Execution. But this I doubt is too deep a Speculation, or too ludicrous a Reafon, to be rely'd on; it being well known, that the Ladies then in favour, were not fo nice, in their Notions, as to think their Preferment their Dishonour, or their Lover a Tyrant: Befides, that easy Monarch lov'd his Roses, without Thorns; nor do we hear, that he much chose to be himself the first Gatherer of them.

e e s

els

Vo

pe ir,

pa

ver,

ent his,

e S

hin

ge,

ould

fion

ke l et a

hat e Th

muc

ng to no ha ve y

ery p

flow i

utely

fe : S

ofitabl

clanch

en w ropose i

Aut

The Lucius Junius Brutus of Nat. Lee, was, in the fame Reign, filenc'd after the third Day of acting it; it being objected that the Plan, and Sentiments of it had too boldly vindicated, and might enflame Republican Principles.

A Prologue (by Dryden) to the Prophetes, was forbid by the Lord Dorset, after the first Day of its being spoken. This happen'd when King William was profecuting the War in Ireland. It must be confess'd, that this Prologue had some familiar, metaphorical Sneers, at the Revolution itself; and as the Poetry of it was good, the Offence of it was less pardonable.

The Tragedy of Mary Queen of Scotland, had been offer'd to the Stage twenty Years before it was acted: But from the profound Penetration of the Master of the Revels, who saw political Spectres in it, that never appear'd in the Presentation, it had lain, so long upon the Hands of the Author; who had at last the good Fortune to prevail with a Mobleman, to favour his Petition to Queen Anne, for Permission to ave it acted: The Queen had the Goodness to refer he Merit of his, Play, to the Opinion of that noble Person, although he was not her Majesty's Lord Chamerlain; upon whose Report of its being, every way, in innocent Piece, it was soon after acted with Success.

Reader, by your Leave I will but just fpeak a Vord, or two to any Author, that has not vet writ pe Line of his next Play, and then I will come to y point again ... What, I would fay to him, is this ir, before you fet Ben to Paper, think well, and prinpally of your Defign, or chief Action, towards which very Line you write ought to be drawn, as to its entre : If we can day of your finest Sentiments, his, or That might be left out, without maining eStory you would tell us, depend upon it, that fine hing is faid in a wrong Place; and though you may ge, that a bright Thought is not to be resisted, you ill not be able to deny, that those very fine Lines ould be much finer, if you could find a proper Ocfion for them: Otherwise, you will be thought to ke less Advice from Aristotle, or Harace, than from pet Bays in the Rebearfal, who very smartly fays hat the Devil is the Plot good for, but to bring in e Things? Compliment the Tafte of your Heavers, much as you please with them, provided they beng to your Subject, but don't like a dainty Preacher, to has his Eye more upon this World, than the next, we your text for them. When your Fable is good, ery part of it will cost you much less Labour, so ep your Narration alive, than you will be forced to flow upon those elegant Discourses, that are not abutely conducive to your Catastrophe, or main Purfe: Scenes of that kind, shew but at best, the unoftable or injudicious Spirit of a Genius. It is but a lancholy Commendation of a fine Thought, to fay, con we have heard it, Well I but what's all this to the rpose? Take therefore in some part, Example by Author last mention'd! There are three Plays of his he

to

m.

the

it;

fit

ub-

for

eing

ofe

that eers

W2

been

ted:

er of that n, fo

128

the

wh

Har

ho

eal

vas o it

ny .

A

er (

hat

o fi

eir

ord

orwe

fing

-La

la's-

at t

the

Vou

wel

m'd

thou

e of

d th

ually

a A

ere,

out t lds, 1

rth

haps

On t

ring ence.

had

his, The Earl of Effex, Anne Bullen, and Mary Queens Scots, which tho' they are all written in the most bar ren, barbarous Style, that was ever able to keep policifion of the Stage, have all interested the Hearts of his Auditors. To what then could this Success be owing. but to the intrinsick, and naked Value of the well-conducted Tales, he has fimply told us? There is fome thing so happy in the Disposition of all his Fables; all his chief Characters are thrown into fuch natural Circumstances of Distress, that their Misery, or Affliction wants very little Affistance from the Ornaments of Syle or Words to speak them. When a skilful Actor is fituated, his bare plaintive Tone of Voice, the Cal of Sorrow from his Eye, his flowly graceful Gesture his humble Sighs of Refignation under his Calamities All these, I say, are sometimes without a Tongue, e qual to the strongest Eloquence. At such a Time, the attentive Auditor supplies from his own Heart, what ever the Poet's Language may fall short of, in Expre fion, and melts himself into every Pang of Humanity which the like Misfortunes in real Life could have in fpir'd.

And what I have observed, whenever I see a Traged desective in its Fable, let there be never so many six Lines in it; I hope I shall be forgiven, if I impute that Desect, to the Idleness, the weak Judgment, or bar ren Invention of the Author.

If I should be ask'd, why I have not always, m felf, follow'd the Rules I would impose upon other I can only answer, that whenever I have not, I liet qually open to the same critical Censure. But havin often observ'd a better than ordinary Syle thrown away upon the loose, and wandering Scenes of an ill choic Story, I imagin'd these Observations might convince some future Author, of how great Advantage a Fable well plann'd must be to a Man of any tolerable Genius

All this, I own, is leading my Reader out of the Way; But if he has as much Time upon his Hand as I have, (provided we are neither of us tir'd) it may be equally to the Purpose, what he reads, or who write of. But as I have no Objection to Method. when it is not troublesome, I return to my Subject Hitherto we have feen no very unreasonable Infance of this absolute Power of a Lord Chamberlain. hough we were to admit, that no one knew of any eal Law, or construction of Law, by which this Power vas given him. I shall now offer some Facts relating o it of a more extraordinary Nature, which I leave ny Reader to give a Name to.

e si che at et ity in the bar

m

ners

lie

avin

way

hole

vino

Fable

eniu

of th Hand

t ma WIN

About the middle of King William's Reign, an Orer of the Lord Chamberlain was, then, subsisting, hat no Actor of either Company, should prefume to o from one, to the other, without a Discharge from eir respective Managers, and the Permission of the ord Chamberlain. Notwithstanding such Order, owell being uneasy at the Favour, Wilks, was then fing into, had without fuch Discharge, left the Dru--Lane Theatre, and engag'd himself to that of Linh's-Inn-Fields: but by what follows, it will appear, at this Order was not so much intended, to do both them good, as to do, that which the Court chiefly your'd (Lincolns-Inn-Fields) no harm. For when well grew diffatisfy'd at his Station there too, he ren'd to Drury-Lane (as he had before gone from it) thout a Discharge: But halt a little ! here, on this e of the Question, the Order was to stand, in force, the fame Offence against it now, was not to be ually pass'd over. He was the next Day taken up a Messenger, and confin'd to the Porter's Lodge, ere, to the best of my Remembrance, he remain'd out two Days; when the Managers of Lincoln's-Innlds, not thinking an Actor of his loofe Character rth their farther Trouble, gave him up; though haps he was releas'd, for some better Reason. on this Occasion, the next Day, behind the Scenes, Drury-Lane, a Person of great Quality, in my ring, enquiring of Powell, into the Nature of his ence, after he had heard it, told him, That if he had Patience, or Spirit enough, to have staid in his french, then go through I

E O

br de

d

М

VI

Bu

no

he

He

rh

er,

ufi oun

nn,

ord,

is

Jai

a

0W

offic

met fter

ogge

te p ous

ey l hifpe

's fa

By t

under it, to ds to

£ I

Confinement; till he had given him Notice of it h would have found him a handformer Way of comin out of it:

Another Time the fame Actor, Powell, was provoked at Will's Coffee-house, in a Dispute about the Play-house Affairs, to firike a Gentleman, whose h mily had been fometimes Mafters of it; a Complaint this Infolence was, in the Ablence of the Lord Chie berlain, immediately made to the Vice-Chamberlan who fo highly referred it, that he thought hime bound in Honour, to carry his power of redressing as far as it could possibly go: For Powell having a Pa in the Play, that was acted the Day after; the Vice Chamberlain fent an Order to filence the whole Com pany, for having fuffer'd Powell to appear upon h Stage, before he had made that Gentleman Satisfied on, although the Mafters of the Theatre had had Notice of Powell's Milbehaviour: However, this O der was obey'd, and remain'd in Force for two or the Days, till the fame Authority was pleas'd or advis to revoke it. From the Measures this injur'd Gent man took for his Redrefs, it may be judg'd how h it was taken for granted, that a Lord Chamberlain is an absolute Power over the Theatre.

I shall now give an Inflance of an Actor, who ha the Resolution to stand upon the Desence of his l berty, against the same Authority, and was relief

by it:

In the fame King's Reign Dobbeet who though from a fevere Exactness in his Nature, he could feldom'long eafy in any Theatre, where Irregularity not to fay injustice, too often prevail'd, yet in the private Conduct of his Affairs, he was a prude honest Man:" He therefore took an usual Care, who he returned to act under the Patent, in Drury La to have his Articles drawn firm and binding: having fome Reafon to think the Patentee had me dealt fairly with him, he quitted the Stage, and would act no more, rather chufing to lofe his whi ever unsatisfy'd, Demands, than go through the chargeable chargeable, and tedious Course of the Law to recover it. But the Patentee, who (from other People's Judgment) knew the Value of him, and who wanted too. to have him fooner back, than the Law could possibly bring him, thought the furer Way would be, to lefire a shorter Redress from the Authority of the Lord Chamberlain. Accordingly, upon his Complaint, a Messenger was immediately dispatch'd to Norwich. where Dogget then was, to bring him up, in Custody: But doughty Dogget, who had Money in his Pocket, nd the Cause of Liberty at his Heart, was not, in he least, intimidated, by this formidable Summons. le was observ'd to obey it, with a particular Cheardness, entertaining his Fellow-traveller, the Messener, all the Way in the Coach (for he had protested aainst riding) with as much Humour, as a Man of his usiness might be capable of tasting. And as he ound his Charges were to be defray'd, he, at every m, call'd for the best Dainties the Country could aford, or a pretended weak Appetite could digeft. At is Rate they jollily roll'd on, more with the Air of Jaunt, than a Journey, or a Party of Pleasure, than a poor Devil in durance. Upon his Arrival in own, he immediately apply'd to the Lord Chief office Holt, for his Habeas Corpus. As his Cafe was mething particular, that eminent, and learned Mifter of the Law took a particular Notice of it : For ogget was not only discharg'd, but the Process of his offinement (according to common Fame) had a Cenre pass'd upon it, in Court, which I doubt, I am t Lawyer enough to repeat! To conclude, the offious Agents in this Affair finding, that, in Dogget, ey had mistaken their Man, were mollify'd into ilder proceedings, and (as he afterwards told me) hisper'd something, in his Ear, that took away Dog-'s farther Uneafiness about it.

经第分点 院 定員 克里卢 医肾 阜 高 平 序 亨 ntil E II

ie Lie

oug id arity

n the

Ease Bu

21

what

By these Instances we see how naturally Power only inded on Custom, is apt, where the Law is fiat, to run into Excesses, and while it laudably pre-ds to govern others, how hard it is to govern iteable f. But fince the Law has lately open'd its Mouth, and has faid plainly, that some part of this Power to govern the Theatre shall be, and is plac'd in a proper Person; and as it is evident, that the Power of that white Staff, ever fince it has been in the noble Hand that now holds it, has been used with the utmost Isnity, I would beg leave of the murmuring Multitude, who frequent the Theatre, to offer them a simple Que stion or two, viz. Pray Gentlemen, how came you or rather your Forefathers never to be mutinous, upon any of the occasional Facts I have related? And why have you been so often tumultuous, upon a Law's he ing made, that only confirms a less Power, than wa formerly exercis'd, without any Law to support it You cannot fure, fay, fuch Discontent is either jul or natural, unless you allow it a Maxim in your le liticks, that power exercis'd without Law, is a le Grievance, than the fame Power exercis'd according to Law!

Having thus given the clearest View I was able, of the usual Regard paid to the Power of a Lord Cham berlain, the Reader will more easily conceive, who Influence, and Operation that Power must naturally have, in all Theatrical Revolutions; and particular in the complete Re-union of both Companies, which the Law techniques and well one

And the limbs Course and Margarettichers my door the

- attal a drait frames comments of comments in section and again their Court managers are all the

- The sett case less out is tracted or departed interest and the contract of the contra Confeder dismension office, best trailescent tell you have an a particularly in control for the and (kirls of the tree at the paint met of a all taken or vi or balli aved leading has posted which is the law has saily open in high the Control of States of States milliation their Man, segment of the latter happen'd in the Year following.

CHAP

to rec

low

ow

efts,

ing

Re

fa

feli

Th

of

may

Sub

e:

k, m

Witn

of n

livin

m th

ing;

pati

CHAP. XI.

ome Chimærical Thoughts of making the Stage useful; Some, to its Reputation. The Patent unprofitable, to all the Proprietors, but one. A fourth Part of it given away to Colonel Brett. A Digression to his Memory. The two Companies of Actors reunited, by his Interest, and Management. The first Direction of Opera's only, given to Mr. Swiney.

ROM the Time, that the Company of Actors, in the Hay-Market, was recruited with those from wy-Lane, and came into the Hands of their new rector, Saviney, the Theatre for three or four Years lowing, fuffer'd fo many Convulsions, and was own every other Winter under fuch different Inefts, and Management, before it came to a firm and ing Settlement, that I am doubtful, if the most can-Reader will have Patience, to go through a full, fair Account of it: And yet I would fain flatter felf, that those, who are not too wise, to frequent Theatre (or have Wit enough to diffinguish what of Sights there, either do Honour, or Difgrace to may think their national Diversion no contempti-Subject, for a more able Historian, than I pretend e: If I have any particular Qualification, for the k, more than another, it is that I have been an ocu-Witness of the feveral Facts, that are to fill up the of my Volume; and am, perhaps, the only Perliving (however unworthy) from whom the fame terials can be collected; but let them come from om they may, whether, at best, they will be worth ing; perhaps a Judgment may be better form'd afpatient Perusal of the following Digression.

Transmin Tra

am

what

rall

larl

In whatever cold Esteem, the Stage may be, among the wife, and powerful; it is not so much a Reproach to those, who contendedly enjoy it in its lowest Condition, as that Condition of it, is to those, who (though they cannot but know, to how valuable a publick Us a Theatre, well establish'd, might be rais'd) yet in so many civiliz'd Nations, have neglected it. This po haps will be call'd thinking my own wifer, than a the wife Heads, in Europe. But I hope a more hun ble Sense will be given to it; at least I only men that if so many Governments have their Reasons, so their Difregard of their Theatres, those Reasons m be deeper, than my Capacity has yet been able dive into: If therefore my fimple Opinion is a wron one, let the Singularity of it expose me: And thouse I am only building a Theatre in the Air, it is then however, at so little Expence, and in so much bet a Tafte, than any I have yet feen, that I cannot be faying of it, as a wifer Man did (it may be) upon wifer Occasion:

or

h

nd :

ith

e p

eı

uda Co

indi

her

od o

quic.

ople

mig

dunt

ith e

ind c ll'd,

t rea ruth (

ht in

in th lat th

tuate,

Candidus imperti; fi non

Give me leave to play, with my Project, in Fancy. I fay then, that as I allow nothing is more liable debase and corrupt the Minds of a People, than a centious Theatre; fo under a just, and proper Establi ment, it were possible to make it, as apparently School of Manners, and of Virtue. Were I to a lect all the Arguments, that might be given for Opinion, or to enforce it by exemplary Proof, might swell this short Digression to a Volume; I therefore trust the Validity of what I have laid don to a fingle Fact, that may be still fresh, in the Men ry of many living Spectators. When the Trage of Cato was first acted, let us call to mind the ble Spirit of Patriotism, which that Play then fus'd into the Breafts of a free People, that cro ed to it; with what affecting Force, was that! elevated of Human Virtues recommended? By he false Pretenders to it felt an unwilling Conviction, and made it a Point of Honour to be foremost, in their Approbation; and this too at a Time, when the fermented Nation had their different Views of Governnent. Yet the fublime Sentiments of Liberty in that enerable Character, rais'd in every sensible Hearer uch conscious Admiration, such compell'd Assent to he Conduct of a fuffering Virtue, as even demanded wo almost irreconcileable Parties to embrace, and oin in their equal Applauses of it. Now not to take om the Merit of the Writer, had that Play never ome to the Stage, how much of this valuable Effect f it must have been lost? It then could have had no fore immediate Weight with the Publick, than our oring upon the many ancient Authors, through hole Works the same Sentiments have been, perhaps, is profitably dispers'd, tho' amongst Millions of Reaers; but by bringing such Sentiments to the Theatre, dinto Action, what a superior Lustre did they shine ith? There Cato breath'd again in Life; and tho' e perish'd in the Cause of Liberty, his Virtue was ictorious, and left the Triumph of it in the Heart every melting Spectator. If Effects like these, are udable; if the Representation of such Plays can car-Conviction with fo much Pleasure, to the Underanding, have they not vaftly the Advantage of any her human Helps to Eloquence? What equal Meod can be found to lead or stimulate the Mind, to quicker Sense of Truth, and Virtue, or warm a ople into the Love and Practice of such Principles, might be at once a Defence, and Honour to their buntry? In what shape could we listen to Virtue th equal Delight or Appetite of Instruction? The ind of Man is naturally free, and when he is comll'd, or menac'd into any Opinion that he does t readily conceive, he is more apt to doubt the ruth of it, than when his Capacity is led by Deht into Evidence and Reason. To preserve a Theain this Strength, and Purity of Morals, is, I grant, hat the wifest Nations, have not been able to pertuate, or to transmit long to their Posterity: But T. 3

e to control of the c

H

ble i

1 1

abli

tly f

to a

or I

ofs,

I A

Men

rage

the I

hen

CTO

at I

B

this Difficulty will rather heighten, than take from the Honour of the Theatre : The greatest Empires haveds cay'd, for want of proper Heads to guide them, and the Ruins of them fometimes have been the Subject of The tres, that could not be, themselves exempt, from a various Revolutions: Yet may not the most natural Inference from all this be, That the Talents requife to form good Actors, great Writers, and true Judge were like those of wife and memorable Ministers, well the Gifts of Fortune, as of Nature, and not a ways to be found, in all Climes or Ages. Or a there be a stronger modern Evidence of the Value dramatick Performances, than that in many Countrie where the papal Religion prevails, the Holy Polis (though it allows not to an Actor Christian Burial) so conscious of the Usefulness of his Art, it will be quently take in the Affistance of the Theatre, to go even Sacred History in a Tragedy, a Recommendation to the more pathetick Regard of their People. He can fuch Principles, in the Face of the World, ref the Bones of a Wretch the lowest Benefit of Christi Charity, after having admitted his Profession which they deprive him of that Charity) to servet folemn Purposes of Religion? How far then is Religious Inhumanity thort of that famous Paint who, to make his Crucifix a Master-piece of Nam stabb'd the innocent Hireling, from whose Body drew it; and having heighten'd the Holy Ports with his last Agonies of Life, then fent it to be confecrated Ornament of an Altar? Though we had only the Authority of common Fame, for this St yet be it true, or false, the Comparison will full just. Or let me ask another Question more hum political.

How came the Athenians to lay out an hund thousand Pounds, upon the Decorations of one in Tragedy of Sophocles? Not sure, as it was merely Spectacle for Idleness, or Vacancy of Thought gape at, but because it was the most rational, most structive, and delightful Composition, that he Wit had yet arriv'd at; and consequently the manufactured to the second sec

Wort

ey

b

ke

rith

nd

uch

e '

rthe

tole

y do

Par

d Ac

To

e Sta

d to

nfifte

aking

g ever

rfland

the St

fwera

wa7

den it

The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c. 212

worthy to be the Entertainment of a wife, and warlike Nation: And it may be still a Question, whether the cosbocles inspir'd this publick Spirit, or this publick

开音。第一年

是语

1 vet

is t

into

Vatu

ody

oru

be ve b

St.

Ail

uma

hun

ne fin

nerci

ough

mo

t he

he I Work Spirit inspired the Sophocles ?

But alas! as the Power of giving, or receiving such. inspirations, from either of these Causes, seems pretty well at an End; now I have that my Bolt, I shall lescend to talk more like a Man of the Age I live in: for, indeed, what is all this to a common English Reader? Why truly, as Shakespear terms it -Caviare to the Multitude ! Honest John Trott will ell you, that if he were to believe what I have faid f the Athenians, he is at most but astonish'd at it; at that if the twentieth Part of the Sum I have pention'd were to be apply'd out of our publick Moey, to the Setting off the best Tragedy, the nicest loddle in the Nation could produce, it would proably raise the Passions higher in those that did Not ke it, than in those that did; it might as likely meet ith an Infurrection, as the Applause of the People, nd fo, may hap, be fitter for the Subject of a Tragey, than for a publick Fund to Support it. roly, Mr. Trott, I cannot but own, that I am very uch of your Opinion: I am only concern'd, that e Theatre has not a better Pretence to the Care and other Confideration of those Governments, where it tolerated; but as what I have faid will not probay do it any great Harm, I hope I have not put you out Patience, by throwing a few good Wishes after an Acquaintance.

To conclude this Digression, If, for the Support of e Stage, what is generally thewn there, must be lowd to the Tafte of common Spectators; or if it is innfiftent with Liberty, to mend that vulgar Tafte, by aking the Multitude less merry there; or by abolishg every low and fenfeless Jollity, in which the Unrflanding can have no Share; whenever, I say, such the State of the Stage, it will be as often liable, to unwerable Censure, and manifest Difgraces. Yerthere ar a Time, not yet out of many People's Memory, hen it subfisted upon its own rational Labours; when even Success attended an Attempt to reduce it to Decency; and when Actors themselves were hardy enough to hazard their Interest, in pursuit of so dangerous a Reformation. And this Criss, I am myself as impatient, as any tir'd Reader can be to arrive at I shall therefore endeavour to lead him the shorted Way to it. But as I am a little jealous of the badnes of the Road, I must reserve to my self the Liberty of calling upon any Matter, in my Way, for a little Refreshment to whatever Company may have the Curiosity, or Goodness, to go along with me.

When the fole managing Patentee at Drury-Lan, for feveral Years could never be persuaded or driven any Account with the Adventurers; Sir Thomas Singwith (who, if I am rightly informed, had an equal Share with him) grew so weary of the Affair, that is actually made a Present of his entire Interest in it, up

C

our elig

me

fha

de (

tle

ell

hat

De 1

t hi

t w

ing,

y N

his y fi

liv

fi

on the following Occasion.

Sir Thomas happen'd, in the Summer preceding the Re-union of the Companies, to make a Vifit to an int mate Friend of his, Colonel Brett, of Sandywell, Gloucestersbire; where the Pleasantness of the Plan and the agreeable Manner of passing his Time then had rais'd him to fuch a Gallantry of Heart, that, return to the Civilities of his Friend the Colonel, made him an Offer of his whole Right in the Patent but not to over-rate the Value of his Present, told h he himself had made nothing of it, these ten Yen But the Colonel (faid he) being a greater Favourite the People in Power, and (as he believ'd) among Actors too, than himself was, might think of lo Scheme, to turn it to Advantage, and in that Light if he lik'd it, it was at his Service. After a gr deal of Raillery on both Sides of what Sir I mas had not made of it, and the particular Advan ges the Colonel was likely to make of it; they ca to a laughing Resolution, That an Instrument show be drawn the next Morning, of an absolute Conveya of the Premisses. A Gentleman of the Law, well know to them both, happening to be a Gueff there, at the

Time, the next Day produc'd the Deed, according to his Instructions, in the Presence of whom, and of others, it was fign'd, seal'd, and deliver'd, to the Purposes therein contain'd.

t et

B. B.

20

ant, n to

distribution of the control of the c here

at, i

tent

d hi

ean

rite

ing the

Lig

2 819

T L

dyani

t show

veya

the fa

roses therein contain'd.

This Transaction may be another Instance (as I have elsewhere observ'd) at how low a Value, the Inserest, in a Theatrical License were then held; tho' it was visible, from the Success of Swiney in that very Year, that with tolerable Management, they could, at to Time, have fail'd of being a prositable Purchase.

The next Thing to be confidered was, what the Colonel should do with his new Theatrical Commison, which, in another's Possession, had been of so ttle Importance. Here it may be necessary to prenife, that this Gentleman was the first of any Confieration, fince my coming to the Stage, with whom I ad contracted a Personal Intimacy; which might be e Reason, why, in this Debate, my Opinion had me weight with him: Of this Intimacy too, I am e more tempted to talk, from the natural Pleasure calling back, in Age, the Pursuits, and happy Arours of Youth long past, which, like the Ideas of a lightful Spring, in a Winter's Rumination, are metimes equal to the former Enjoyment of them. hall therefore, rather chuse, in this Place to gramyself, than my Reader, by setting the fairest de of this Gentleman in view, and by indulging a tle conscious Vanity, in shewing how early in Life, fell into the Poffession of so agreeable a Companion: hatever Failings he might have to others, he had ne to me; nor was he, where he had them, withthis valuable Qualities to ballance or fosten them. t, then, what was not, to be commended in him, with his Ashes, never to be rak'd into: But friendly Favours I receiv'd from him, while ing, give me still a Pleasure, in paying this ly Mite of my Acknowledgment, in my Power, his Memory. And if my taking this Liberty, y find Pardon from feveral of his fair Relations, living, for whom I profess the utmost Refpect, it will give me but little Concern, tho' my critical Readers flould think it all Impertinence.

bi

71

iti

ala

au

1

H

fc1

ve

om

at :

eac

uth

r i om

hen

ree

anc

unt

He

rt, f

id (1

This Gentleman, then, Henry, was the eldest Son of Henry Brett, Efg; of Cowley, in Gloucestersbire, who coming early to his Estate of about two those fand a Year, by the usual Negligences of young Hein. had, before this, his eldest Son came of Age, sunk it to about half that Value, and that not wholly free from Incumbrances. Mr. Brett, whom I am speak. ing of, had his Education, and I might fay ended at the University of Oxford; for the was settled some time after at the Temple, he so little followed the Law there, that his Neglect of it, made the Law (like some of his fair and frail Admirers) very often follow him. As he had an uncommon Shared Social Wit, and a handsome Person, with a sanguing Bloom in his Complexion, no wonder they persuaed him, that he might have a better Chance of For tune, by throwing fuch Accomplishments, into the gayer World, than by shutting them up in a Study The first View, that fires the Head of a young Go tleman of this modifh Ambition, just broke look from Business, is to cut a Figure (as they call it) i a Side-box, at the Play, from whence their nor Step is to the Green Room behind the Scenes, form times their Non ultra. Hither, at last then, in the hopeful Quest of his Fortune, came this Gentleman Errant, not doubting but the fickle Dame, while was thus qualify'd to receive her, might be tempu to fall into his Lap. And though, possibly, the Charm of our Theatrical Nymphs might have their Share, drawing him thither; yet, in my Observation, t most visible Cause of his first coming, was a ma fincere Passion he had conceiv'd for a fair full-bottom Perriwig, which I then wore in my first Play of Fool in Fashion, in the Year 1695. For it is to noted, that the Beaux of those Days, were of a qui different Cast, from the modern Stamp, and had mor of the Stateliness of the Peacock in their Mien, the (which now feems to be their highest Emulation) pert Air of a Lapwig. Now whatever Contemphile

02

rt,

00

irs,

ink

free

ak.

di tled

wed the very

re of uine

uad-

For the tudy.

Gen-look

t) i

next

fome thi

eman le la

mpu har

re, I n, t ma

ttom of the a qui mor , tha

n) t ntem

hild

hilosophers may have, for a fine Perriwig; my riend, who was not to despise the World, but to ve in it, knew very well, that so material an Article Drefs, upon the Head of a Man of Sense, if it beame him, could never fail of drawing to him a more artial Regard, and Benevolence, than could possibly hop'd for, in an ill-made one. This perhaps may ften the grave Cenfure, which fo youthful a Purhase might otherwise have laid upon him: In a Vord, he made his Attack upon this Perriwig, as our young Fellows generally do upon a Lady of Pleare; first, by a few familiar Praises of her Person, nd then, a civil Enquiry into the Price of it. But on his observing me a little surpriz'd at the Levity his Question, about a Fop's Perriwig, he began to illy himself, with so much Wit and Humour, upon e Folly of his Fondness for it, that he struck me ith an equal Defire of granting any Thing, in my ower, to oblige fo facetious a Customer. This finplar Beginning of our Conversation, and the mutual aughs that enfued upon it, ended in an Agreement, finish our Bargain that Night, over a Bottle. If it were possible, the Relation of the happy Infcretions which pass'd between us that Night, could ve the tenth Part of the Pleasure, I then receiv'd om them, I could still repeat them with Delight: at as it may be doubtful, whether the Patience of a eader may be quite so strong, as the Vanity of an uthor, I shall cut it short, by only faying, That igle Bottle was the Sire of many a jolly Dozen, that fome Years following, like orderly Children, henever they were call'd for, came into the same ompany. Nor indeed, did I think from that Time, henever he was to be had, any Evening could be reeably enjoy'd without him. But the long contiance of our Intimacy, perhaps, may be thus acunted for.

He who can taste Wit in another, may, in some rt, be faid to have it himself: Now, as I always had d (I bless myself for the Folly) still have a quick Relish

Relish of whatever did, or can give me Delish This Gentleman could not but fee the youthful I was generally rais'd to, whenever I had the Hap ness of a Tite a tite with him; and it may be a m Point, whether Wit is not as often inspir'd, by apper Attention, as by the brightest Reply, to it. The fore as he had Wit enough for any two People, and had Attention enough for any four, there could well be wanting a focial Delight on either And tho' it may be true, that a Man of a handle Person is apt to draw a partial Ear to every Thing fays; yet this Gentleman feldom faid any Thing, the might not have made a Man of the plainest Person greeable. Such a continual Defire to please, it m be imagin'd, could not but, fometimes lead him in a little venial Flattery, rather than not fucceed in And I, perhaps, might be one of those Flies, that caught in this Honey. As I was, then, a young cessful Author, and an Actor, in some unexped Favour, whether defervedly or not, imports not; fuch Appearances, at least were plausible Pretent enough, for an amicable Adulation to enlarge up and the Sallies of it a less Vanity, than mine my not have been able to refift. Whatever this Weakness my fide might be, I was not alone in it; for I have he a Gentleman of Condition fay, who knew the Wor as well as most Men that live in it, that let his Difa tion be everforuch upon its guard, he never fell is Mr. Brett's Company without being loth to leave or carrying away a better Opinion of himself in it. If his Conversation had this Effect among Men; what must we suppose to have been the Com quence, when he gave it a yet fofter turn among t fair Sex? Here now, a French Novellist would to you fifty pretty Lies of him; but as I chuse to tender of Secrets of that fort, I shall only borrow good Breeding of that Language, and tell you, in Word, that I knew feveral Instances of his being Homme a bonne Fortune. But though his freque Successes might generally keep him, from the fual Disquiets of a Lover, he knew this was a

in

g ro

gn

rie

oui v t

is

I

th

dt

y S ke i

Af

ea,

ided

e M

m

dI

The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c. 217

too liquorish to last; and therefore had Reslexion enough, to be govern'd by the Advice of his Friends, to turn these his Advantages of Nature to a better Use.

Among the many Men of Condition, with whom his Conversation had recommended him, to an Intinacy; Sir Thomas Skipwith had taken a particular Indination to him; and as he had the Advancement of his Fortune, at Heart, introduc'd him, where there was Lady, who had enough in her Power, to disencumer him of the World, and make him every way easy, or Life.

producting the state of the sta it m

at w

ng f

eped ot;

eten

upa

mig

enefs

e hea

Wor

Difa

fell i

eave

lf fro

ong t

Con

ong t

uld t

e to

row t

ou, m

being

freque

the Is a Li

While he was in pursuit of this Affair, in which no ime was to be loft (for the Lady was to be in Town ut for three Weeks) I one Day found him idling beind the Scenes, before the Play was begun. Upon ght of him, I took the usual Freedom he allow'd e, to rate him roundly, for the Madness of not imroving every Moment, in his Power, in what was fuch Consequence to him. Why are you not (faid where you know you only should be? If your Deon should once get Wind, in the Town, the Ill-will your Enemies, or the Sincerity of the Lady's riends, may foon blow up your Hopes, which, in our Circumstances of Life, cannot be long supported, the bare Appearance of a Gentleman. ——But is impossible to proceed, without some Apology. r the very familiar Circumstance, that is to follow.

Yet, as it might not be so trivial in its Effect, I sear it may be in the Narration, and is a Mark that Intimacy, which is necessary should be known, d been between us, I will honestly make bold with y Scruples, and let the plain Truth of my Story ke its Chance for Contempt, or Approbation.

After twenty Exerces, to clear himself of the Neet, I had so warmly charg'd him with, he conided them, with telling me, he had been out all Morning, upon Business, and that his Linnen was much soil'd, to be seen in Company. Oh, ho! d I, is that all? Come along with me, we will

TI

f

t)

f

m

6

f

m

M

VO

in it

he

or f

in

vit

De:

ev

on vhe

Ufe

hou fte:

ate

vea

he ir s

im

though

foon get over that dainty Difficulty: Upon which ! haul'd him, by the Sleeve into my Shifting-Room he either staring, laughing, or hanging back all the Way. There, when I had lock'd him in, I began to firip off my upper Cloaths, and bade him do the fame; ftill he either did not, or would not, feem to under stand me, and continuing his Laugh, cry'd, What! i the Puppy mad? No, no, only positive, said I; for look you, in short, the Play is ready to begin, and the Parts that you, and I, are to act to Day, are not d equal Consequence; mine of young Reveller in Greenwich-Park) is but a Rake; but whatever you may be, you are not to appear so; therefore take my Shirt, and give me yours; for depend upon't flay her you shall not, and so go about your Bufiness. To conclude, we fairly chang'd Linnen, nor could his Mo ther's have wrap'd him up more fortunately; for it about ten Days he marry'd the Lady. In a Year of two after his Marriage, he was chosen a Membere that Parliament, which was fitting, when King Willia And, upon the raising of some new Regiment was made Lieutenant-colonel, to that of Sir Charles Hotham. But as his Ambition extended not beyond the Bounds of a Park Wall, and a pleasant Retreat in the Corner of it, which with too much Expence he has just finish'd, he, within another Year, had leave to a fign his Company to a younger Brother.

This was the Figure, in Life, he made, when Stathomas Skipwith thought him the most proper Person to oblige (if it could be an Obligation) with the Prefent of his Interest in the Patent. And from the Anecdotes of my Intimacy with him, it may be less Surprize, when he came to Town invested with the new Theatrical Power, that I should be the first Person, to whom he took any Notice of it. And not withstanding he knew I was then engag'd, in anothe Interest at the Hay-Market, he desired we might consider together, of the best Use he could make of it assuring me at the same Time, he should think it a none to himself, unless it could in some Shape be turn'd to my Advantage. This friendly Declaration though it might be generous in him to make, was not peedful, to incline me, in whatever might be honeftly in my Power, whether by Interest or Negotiation, to ferve him. My first Advice therefore, was, That he should produce his Deed to the other managing Patentee of Drury-Lane, and demand immediate Entrance to a joint Possession of all Effects, and Powers, to which that Deed had given him an equal Title. After which, if he met with no Opposition, to this Demand (as upon fight of it he did not) that he should be watchful against any Contradiction, from his Collegue, in whatever he might propose, in carrying on the Affair, but to let him see, that he was determin'd in all his Measures. Yet to heighten that Refolution, with an Ease and Temper in his manner, as f he took it for granted, there could be no Opposition made, to whatever he had a Mind to. For that this Method, added to his natural Talent of Persuading, would imperceptibly lead his Collegue, into a Relince on his superior Understanding, That, however ittle he car'd for Bufiness, he should give himself he Air at least, of Enquiry into what had been done, hat what he intended to do, might be thought more onfiderable, and be the readier comply'd with: For f he once suffer'd his Collegue to seem wiser than imself, there would be no end of his perplexing him with absurd, and dilatory Measures; direct, and plain Dealing being a Quality his natural Diffidence would ever suffer him to be Master of; of which, his not omplying with his verbal Agreement with Swiney, when the Hay-Market House was taken for both their les, was an Evidence. And though some People hought it Depth, and Policy in him, to keep Things ften in Confusion, it was ever my Opinion they overated his Skill, and that, in reality his Parts were too reak, for his Post, in which he had always acted, to he best of his Knowledge. That his late Collegue, ir Thomas Skipwith, had trusted too much to his Caacity, for this fort of Business; and was treated by im accordingly, without ever receiving any Profits U 2

Person he Pretheke e less ith this 11

m,

the

n to ne

der-

! is for the

t d

(in you

hen

To

Mo

or i

ar o

per o

nents harla

nd th

in the

to It

off Perd notes another ht con-

of it

aration though

from it, for several Years: Insomuch that when he found his Interest in such desperate Hands, he thought the best Thing he could do with it was, (as he faw) to give it away. Therefore if he (Mr. Brett) could once fix himself, as I had advis'd, upon a different Foot with this, hitherto untractable Manager, the Bufiness would soon run through whatever Channel he might have a Mind to lead it. And though I allow? the greatest Difficulty he would meet with, would be in getting his Consent to a Union of the two Companies, which was the only Scheme that could raise the Patent to its former Value, and which I knew, this close Manager, would fecretly lay possible Rub in the Way to; yet it was visible, there was a Way of reducing him to Compliance: For though, it was true his Caution would never part with a Straw, by way of Concession, yet to a high Hand he would give up any Thing, provided he was fuffer'd to ken his Title to it: If his Hat were taken from his Head in the Street, he would make no farther Resistance, than to fay, I am not willing to part with it. Much less would he have the Resolution openly to oppose any just Measures, when he should find one, who with an equal Right, to his, and with a known Interest to bring them about, was refolv'd to go through with them.

Now though I knew my Friend was as thoroughly acquainted with this Patentee's Temper, as my felf yet I thought it not amifs to quicken and support his Resolution, by confirming to him, the little Trouble he would meet with, in pursuit of the Union had advis'd him to; for it must be known, that of our Side, Trouble was a Sort of Physick we did not much care to take: But as the Fatigue of this Affair was likely to be lower'd by a good deal of Entertainment, and Humour, which would naturally engage him, in his dealing with so exotick a Partner; knew that this softening the Business, into a Diversion, would lessen every Difficulty, that lay in our witto it.

However copiously I may have indulg'd my self in

Г

n

h

p n

he

ak

ent

he

hir

rot

ee :

he

her

Ack

H

this Commemoration of a Gentleman, with whom I had pass'd so many of my younger Days, with Pleasure, yet the Reader may by this Infight into his Character, and by that of the other Patentee, be better able to judge of the fecret Springs, that gave Motion to, or obstructed so considerable an Event, as that of the Reunion of the two Companies of Actors in 1708. In Histories of more weight, for want of fuch Particulars, . we are often deceiv'd in the true Causes of Facts, that most concern us, to be let into; which sometimes makes us ascribe to Policy, or false Appearances of Wisdom, what perhaps, in Reality, was the mere Effect of Chance or Humour.

he

ght

(W) uld

ent

Bu-

he

wd

ould

two

ould

new,

Rubs

Way

was , by vould

keep

Head,

ance,

Much

profe

with

est to

with

ough

y felf

upport

Trou-

nion

nat of

id no

is Af

of En

lly en

tner;

Divert

ur way

felf it

thi

Immediately after Mr. Brett was admitted as a joint Patentee, he made use of the Intimacy he had with the Vice-Chamberlain to affift his Scheme of this inended Union, in which he so far prevail'd, that it was oon after left to the particular Care of the same Vice-Chamberlain, to give him all the Aid, and Power nerestary to the bringing what he defired, to Perfection. The Scheme was, to have but one Theatre for Plays, nd another for Operas, under separate Interests. And his the generality of Spectators, as well as the most pprov'd Actors, had been fometime calling for, as the mly Expedient to recover the Credit of the Stage, and he valuable Interests of its Managers.

As the Condition of the Comedians at this Time is aken Notice of in my Dedication of the Wife's Remiment, to the Marquis (now Duke) of Kent, and hen Lord Chamberlain, which was publish'd above hirty Years ago, when I had no thought of ever roubling the World with this Theatrical History, I te no Reason why it may not pass; as a Voucher of he Facts I am now speaking of ; I shall therefore give hem, in the very Light I then faw them. After some cknowledgment for his Lordship's Protection of our Hay-Market) Theatre, it is further faid-

"The Stage has, for many Years, 'till of late, groan'd under the greatest Discouragements, which have been very much, if not wholly owing to the Mismanagement of those, that have aukwardly go-

" vern'd

" and when those Hopes have fail'd, the Loss ha been tyrannically deducted out of the Actors Sala-

This is meant of our being suffer'd to come over Swiney—they were very near being wholly his

" ande, or at least the Use of their Labour was to be swallow'd up, in the pretended Merit of Singing and

" Dancing."

What follows, relates to the Difficulties in dealing with the then impracticable Manager, viz.

"——— And though your Lordship's Tendeme

" staid to convince a Man of your good Intention " to him, than to do him even a Service against him

"Will; yet fince your Lordship has so happily begate the Establishment of the separate Diversions, we in "the Establishment of the separate Diversions, we in in hope, that the same Justice, and Resolution

" will fill persuade you, to go as successfully through " with it. But while any Man is suffer'd to confour the Industry, and Use of them, by acting publick

" in Opposition to your Lordship's equal Intention " under a false, and intricate Pretence of not being able to comply with them; the Town is likely

" be more entertain'd with the private Diffention than the publick Performance of either, and

"Actors, in a perpetual Fear, and Necessity of petition ing your Lordship every Season, for new Relief."

Such was the State of the Stage, immediately preceding the Time of Mr. Brett's being admitted joint Patentee, who, as he saw, with clearer Eye what was its evident Interest, lest no proper Measure unattempted, to make this, so long despair'd of, Unapracticable. The most apparent Difficulty to be gover, in this Affair, was, what could be done for saw, in consideration of his being oblig'd to give those Actors, whom the Power and Choice of the Low Chamberlain had the Year before, set him at the Hamos, and by whose Management, those Actors had some themselves in a prosperous Condition. But an so cident

upon

ins

s ha

Sala-

then

ver i

y lai

tob

g an

ealin

lerne

rathe

ention

of hi

ely prenitted er Eye Aeafure, Union be ge for Su

he Lon he Ha ad four an Ad cident, at this Time, happily contributed, to make that Matter easy. The Inclination of our People of Quality for foreign Operas, had now reach'd the Ears of Italy, and the Credit of their Taffe had drawn over from thence, without any more particular Invitation. one of their capital Singers, the famous Signior Cavaliero Nocolini : From whose Arrival, and the Impatience of the Town to hear him, it was concluded, that Operas being now so compleatly provided, could not fail of Success! and that by making Saviney sole Director of them, the Profits must be an ample Compensation for his Refignation of the Actors. This Matter being thus adjusted by Saviney's Acceptance of the Opera only to be perform'd at the Hay-Market House; the Actors were all order'd to return to Drury-Lane, there to remain (under the Patentees) her Majesty's only Company of Comedians.

CHAP.

e parament of sense to total;

CHAP. XII.

A short View of the Opera, when first divided from the Comedy. Plays recover their Credit. The old Patentee uneasy at their Success. Wby, The Occasion of Colonel Brett's throwing up bis Share in the Patent. The Consequences of it. Anecdotes of Goodman the Actor. The Rate of favourite Actors, in his Time. The Patentees, by endeavouring to reduce their Price, lose them all a second time. The principal Comedians return to the Hay-market in Shares with Swiney. They alter that Theatre, The original and present Form of the Theatre in Drury-Lane, compar'd. Operas fall off. The Occasion of it. Farther Observations upon The Patentee disposses'd of Drury. Lane Theatre. Mr. Collier, with a New License, beads the Remains of that Company.

Lays, and Operas, being thus establish'd upon separate Interests, they were now left, to make the best of their way, into Favour, by their different Merit, Although the Opera is not a Plant of our Native Growth, nor what our plainer Appetites are fond of, and is of fo delicate a Nature, that without excessive Charge, it cannot live long among us; especially while the nicest Connoisseurs in Musick fall into such various Herefies in Taste, every Sect pretending to be the true one: Yet as it is call'd a Theatrical Entertainment, and by its Alliance, or Neutrality, has more or less affected our domestic Theatre, a short View of its Progress

(fo

had

adr dift

for

Per

for half

coul

of v

may be allow'd a Place in our History.

After this new Regulation, the first Opera that appeared was Pyrrbus. Subscriptions, at that Time, were not extended, as of late, to the whole Seafon, but were limited to the first six Days only of a new Opera. The chief Performers, in this, were Nicolini, Valertini,

d

it.

up

of

be eir

ıci-

in

re.

off.

pon

iry-

Vew

any.

fepa-

e beft

Ierit.

ative

id of,

effive

while

arious

e true

t, and

Fected

ogres

pear'd

ot exe

. The

Valer

ting

sini, and Mrs. Tofts; and for the inferior Parts, the best that were then to be found. Whatever Praises may have been given to the most famous Voices, that have been heard fince Nicolini; upon the whole, I cannot but come into the Opinion, that still prevails among several Persons of Condition, who are able to give a Reason for their liking, that no Singer, fince his Time, has fo justly, and gracefully acquitted himself, in whatever Character he appear'd as Nicolini. At most, the Difference between him, and the greatest Favourite of the Ladies, Farinelli, amounted but to this, that he might fometimes more exquisitely surprize us, but Nicolini (by pleafing the Eye, as well as the Ear) fill'd us with a more various, and rational Delight. Whether in this Excellence, he has fince had any Competitor, perhaps, will be better judg'd, by what the Critical Censor of Great-Britain says of him in his 115th Tatler, viz.

"Nicolini fets off the Character he bears in an Opera, by his Action, as much as he does the Words of it by his Voice; every Limb and Finger contributes to the Part he acts, infomuch that a deaf Man might go along with him in the Sense of it. There is scarce a beautiful Posture, in an old Statue, which he does not plant himself in, as the different Circumstances of the Story give occasion for it——He performs the most ordinary Action, in a Manner suitable to the Greatness of his Character, and shews the Prince, even in the giving of a Letter, " or dispatching of a Message, &c.

His Voice, at his first Time of being among us, (for he made us a second Visit when it was impair'd) had all that strong, clear, Sweetness of Tone, so lately admir'd in Senessino. A blind Man could scarce have distinguish'd them; but in Volubility of Throat, the former had much the Superiority. This so excellent Performer's Agreement was eight hundred Guineas for the Year, which is but an eighth Part more than half the Sum that has since been given to several that could never totally surpass him: The Consequence of which is, that the Losses by Operas, for several Seasons, to the End of the Year 1738, have been so great, that those Gentlemen of Quality, who last undertook the Direction of them, found it ridiculous any longer to entertain the Publick, at so extravagant an Expence, while no one particular Person thought himfelf oblig'd by it.

Mrs. Tofts, who took her first Grounds of Musick here in her own Country, before the Italian Taffe had so highly prevail'd, was then but an Adept in it: Yet, whatever Defect the fashionably skilful might find in her manner, she had, in the general Sense of her Spectators, Charms that few of the most learned Singers ever arrive at. The Beauty of her fine proportion'd Figure, and the exquisitely sweet, filver Tone of her Voice, with that peculiar rapid Swiftness of her Throat, were Perfections not to be imitated by Art or Labour. Valentini I have already mention'd, therefore need only fay further of him, that though he was every Way inferior to Nicolini, yet as he had the Advantage of giving us our first Impression of a good Opera Singer, he had still his Admirers, and was of great Service in being so skilful a Second to his Superior.

1

f

g

e

g

al

ol

th

in hi

Pr

Slatur

kn the

ed

25 nov

his

1

was cou

Cor

nal

Three fuch excellent Performers, in the fame Kind of Entertainment at once, England till this Time had never feen: Without any farther Comparison, then, with the much dearer bought, who have succeeded them; their Novelty, at least was a Charm that drew vast Audiences of the fine World after them, Swiney their fole Director was prosperous, and in one Winter, a Gainer by them of a moderate younger Brother's Fortune. But as Musick, by so profuse a Dispensation of her Beauties, could not always supply our dainty Appetites with equal Variety, nor for ever please us with the same Objects; the Opera, after one Iuxurious Season, like the fine Wife of a roving Hufband, began to lofe its Charms, and every Day difcovered to our Satiety, Imperfections, which our former Fondness had been blind to: But of this I shall observe more in its Place; in the mean Time, let us enquire into the Productions of our native Theatre.

0

1-

In-

n-

ck

fte

it:

ht

of

ned

ro-

ver

ness by

n'd,

ugh

had

of a

and

d to

Kind

had

then,

eeded that

them.

n one

unger fuse a

upply

r ever er one

Hul-

y dif-

ur for-

1 shall us en-

It

It may eafily be conceiv'd, that by this entire Reunion of the two Companies, Plays must generally have been perform'd, to a more than usual Advantage and Exactness: For now every chief Actor, according to his particular Capacity, piqued himself upon rectifying those Errors, which during their divided State, were almost unavoidable. Such a Choice of Actors added a Ric to every good Play, as it was then ferv'd up to the publick Entertainment: The common People-crowded to them, with a more joyous Expectation, and those of the higher Taste return'd to them, as to old Acquaintances with new Defires. after a long Absence. In a Word, all Parties seem'd better pleas'd, but he, who one might imagine had most Reason to be so, the (lately) sole managing Patentee. He, indeed faw his Power daily mould'ring from his own lands, into those of Mr. Brett; whose gentlemanly Manner of making every one's Bufiness easy to him, threw their old Master under a Difregard, which he had not been us'd to, nor could with all his happy Change of Affairs, support. Although this grave Theatrical Minister, of whom I have been oblig'd to make fuch frequent mention, had acquired the Reputation of a most profound Politician, by being often incomprehenfible, yet I am not fure, that his Conduct at this Juncture, gave us not an evident Proof that he was like other trail Mortals, more a Slave to his Passions, than his Interest; for no Creature ever feem'd more fond of Power, that so little knew how to use it to his Profit and Reputation; otherwise he could not possibly have been so discontented in his secure and prosperous State of the Theatre. as to resolve, at all Hazards, to destroy it. We shall now see what infallible Measures he took, to bring his laudable Scheme to Perfection.

He plainly faw, that as this disagreeable Prosperity was chiefly owing to the Conduct of Mr. Brett, there fould be no hope of recovering the Stage to its former Confusion, but by finding some effectual Means to make Mr. Brett weary of his Charge: The most probable he could, for the present, think of, in this

Diffress, was to call in the Adventurers (whom for many Years, by his Defence in Law, he had kept out) now to take care of their visibly improving Interests. This fair Appearance of Equity, being known to be his own Proposal, he rightly guess'd would incline these Adventurers to form a Majority of Votes on his Side in all Theatrical Questions; and consequently become a Check upon the Pour of Mr. Brett, who had so visibly alienated the cents of his Theatrical Subjects, and now began to govern without him. When the Adventurers, therefore were re-admitted to their old Government; after having recommended himself to them, by proposing to make some small Dividend of the Profits (though he did not defign that Jest should be repeated) he took care that the Creditors of the Patent, who were, then, no inconfderable Body, should carry off the every Weeks clear Profits, in proportion to their feveral Dues and Demands. This Conduct, fo speciously just, he had Hopes would let Mr. Brett fee, that his Share in the Patent was not so valuable an Acquisition as, perhaps he might think it; and probably might make a Man of his Turn to Pleasure, soon weary of the little Profit, and great Plague it gave him. Now, though the might be all notable Expedients, yet I cannot far they would have wholly contributed to Mr. Brett quitting his Post, had not a Matter of much stronge Moment, an unexpected Dispute between him, an Sir Thomas Skipwith, prevailed with him to lay down: For in the midst of this flourishing State of the Patent, Mr. Brett was furpriz'd with a Subpœna int Chancery, from Sir Thomas Skipwith, who alledge in his Bill, that the Conveyance he had made of his Interest in the Patent to Mr. Brett, was only intended in Trust. (Whatever the Intent might be, the Dea itself, which I then read, made no mention of any Tru whatever.) But whether Mr. Brett, as Sir Thomas farther afferted, had previously, or after the Deed was fign'd given his Word of Honour, that if he should eve make the Stage turn to any Account or Profit, he would

01

ın

ro

ur

11,

Í

eti

eri

g

and

ho

近

TVI

bly

itho

Cto

hom

kept

Inte-

nwor

d intes on

ently

Who

trial

him.

ted to

ended

fmall

lefign

t the

confi-

clear

d De-

e had

in the

rham.

a Man

Pro

thele

ot far

Brett

ronge

n, and

lay i

of the

na int

lledg'd of hi

tende

Deed

y Trul

farthe

fign'd

ld ever

ofit, he

Would

would certainly restore it: That indeed, I can say nothing to; but be the Deed valid, or void, the Facts that apparently followed were, that though Mr. Brett. in his Answer to this Bill, absolutely denied his receiving this Affignment, either in Trust, or upon any limited Condition, of what Kind foever; yet he made no farther Defence in the Cause. But fince he found Sir Thomas had thought fit, on any Account to fue for the Restitution of it: and Mr. Brett being himfelf conscious, that as the World knew, he had paid no Confideration for it; his keeping it might be mifconstrued, or not favourably spoken of; or perhaps finding, though the Profits were great, they were confantly swallowed up (as has been observed) by the previous Satisfaction of old Debts, he grew fo tired of the Plague and Trouble, the whole Affair had given him, and was likely still to engage him in, that in a few Weeks after, he withdrew himself from all concern with the Theatre, and quietly left Sir Thomas to find is better Account in it. And thus stood this undecied Right, till upon the Demise of Sir Thomas, Mr. Brett being allowed the Charges he had been at, in is Attendance, and Profecution of the Union, reonveyed his Share of the Patent to Sir George Skipwith, the Son and Heir of Sir Thomas.

Our Politician, the old Patentee, having thus formately got rid of Mr. Brett, who had so rashly rought the Patent once more to be a profitable Teure, was now again at liberty to chuse rather to lose

I, than not to have it all to himself,

I have elsewhere observed, that nothing can so efthually secure the strength, or contribute to the proferity of a good Company, as the Directors of it havg always, as near as possible, an amicable Underanding, with three or four of their best Actors, hose good, or ill will, must naturally make a wide ifference, in their profitable, or useless manner of rving them: While the principal are kept reasonbly easy, the lower Class can never be troublesome, ithout hurting themselves: But when a valuable ftor is hardly treated, the Master must be a very cunning cunning Man, that finds his Account in it. We shall now see how far Experience will verify this Observation.

The Patentees thinking themselves secure, in being restored to their former absolute power, over this, now, only Company, chose rather to govern it by the Reverse of the Method I have recommended: For tho' the daily charge of their united Company amounted not, by a good deal, to what either of the two Companies, now in Drury-Lane, or Covent-Garden, fingly, arises; they notwithstanding fell into their former politicks, of thinking every Shilling taken from a hir'd Actor, fo much clear Gain to the Proprietor: Many of their people, therefore, were actually, if not injudiciously, reduced in their pay, and others given to understand, the same Fate was design'd them, of which last Number I, my felf, was one, which occurs to my Memory, by the Answer I made to one of the Adventurers; who, in Justification of their intended proceeding, told me, that my Salary, tho' it should be less, than it was, by ten Shillings a Week, would still be more than ever Goodman had, who was a better Actor, than I could pretend to be: To which I reply'd, This may be true, but then you know, Sir, it is as true, that Goodman was forced to go upon the High-way for a Livelihood. As this was a known Fact of Goodman, my mentioning it, on that Occasion, I believe, was of Service to me; at least, my Salary was not reduced after it. To fay a Word or two more of Goodman, so celebrated an Actor, in his Time, perhaps may fet the conduct of the Patentees in a clearer Light. Though Goodman had left the Stage, before I came to it, I had some slight Acquaintance with him. About the Time of his being expected to be an Evidence against Sir John Fenwith, in the Affaffination-plot, in 1696, I happen'd to meet him at Dinner, at Sir Thomas Skipwith's, who, as he was an agreeable Companion himself, liked Goodmin for the same Quality. Here it was that Goodman without Disguise, or iparing himself, fell into a laugh

CO

h

Bu

is

er

1 abl

ta

L

irly

ne y oodi

e C

nd 1

th

ith ;

s T

e Co

gly ilt t

It w

1

1-

18,

d:

ny

he

25-nto

ta-

the

ac-

and

n'd

ne,

ade

of

ary,

gs a

had.

be:

you

d to

Was

that leaft,

Word

r, in

e Pad left

t Ac-

being

wick,

meet

as he

odmon

odman,

laugh-

. ing

ing Account of feveral loofe passages of bis younger Life; as his being expell'd the University of Cambridge. for being one of the hot-headed Sparks, who were concerned in the cutting, and defacing the Duke of Monmouth's Picture, then Chancellor of that place. But this Difgrace, it feems, had not disqualify'd him for the Stage; which like the Sea-fervice, refuses no Man, for his Morals, that is able-bodied: There, as an Actor, he foon grew into a different Reputation; but whatever his Merit might be, the pay of a hired Hero, in those Days, was so very low, that he was forced, it feems, to take the Air (as he called it) and borrow what Money the first Man he met with had about him. But this being his first Exploit of that Kind, which the scantiness of his Theatrical Fortune had reduced him to, King James was prevail'd upon to pardon him: Which Goodman faid, was doing him to particular an Honour, that no Man could wonder. f his Acknowledgment had carry'd him a little farher than ordinary, into the Interest of that Prince: But as he had, lately, been out of Luck, in backing is old Master, he had now no way to get home the life he was out, upon his Account, but by being uner the same Obligations to King William.

Another Anecdote of him, tho' not quite fo dishonouably enterprizing, which I had from his own Mouth, ta different time, will equally shew to what low shifts Life, the poor provision for good Actors, under the trly Government of the Patent, reduced them. beyounger Days of their Heroism, Captain Griffin, and wdman, were confin'd by their moderate Salaries, to e Occonomy of lying together, in the same Bed, nd having but one whole Shirt between them: One them being under the Obligation of a Rendezvous ith a fair Lady, infifted upon his wearing it, out of s Turn, which occasioned so high a Dispute, that e Combat was immediately demanded, and accordgly their pretenfions to it, were decided by a fair ilt upon the spot, in the Room where they lay: at whether Clytus, or Alexander was oblig'd to fee Company, till a worse could be washed for him,

X 2:

232 The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c.

feems not to be a material point, in their History, or to my purpose.

By this Rate of Goodman, who, till the Time of his quitting the Stage, never had more, than what is call'd forty Shillings a Week, it may be judg'd, how cheap the Labour of Actors had been formerly; and the Patentees thought it a Folly to continue the higher price, (which their Divisions had fince raised them to) now there was but one Market for them; but alas! they had forgot their former fatal mistake of squabbling with their Actors, in 1695; nor did they make any Allowance for the changes and operations of Time, or enough consider the Interest the Actors had in the Lord Chamberlain, on whose protection they might always rely, and whose Decrees had been less restrain'd by precedent, than those of a Lord Chancellor.

In this mistaken View of their Interest, the Patentees, by treating their Actors as Enemies, really made them fo: And when once the Masters of a hired Company think not their Actors Hearts as necessary, as their Hands, they cannot be faid to have agreed for above half the Work, they are able to do in a Day: Or, if an unexpected fuccess should, notwithstanding, make the profits, in any gross Disproportion, greater, than the Wages; the Wages will always have fomething worse, than a Murmur, at the Head of them, that will not only measure the Merit of the Actor, by the Gains of the Proprietor, but will never naturally be quiet, till every scheme of getting into property has been tried, to make the Servant his own Master: And this, as far as Experience can make me judge, will always be, in either of these Cases, the state of our English Theatre. What Truth there may be, in this Observation, we are now coming to a proof of.

To enumerate all the particular Acts of Power, in which the Patentees daily bore hard, upon this, now only Company of Actors, might be as tedious, as unnecessary: I shall therefore come at once, to their most material Grievance, upon which they grounded their complaint to the Lord Chamberlain, who in the

Tear

H

h

VI

th

ha

th

(h

too

for

Th

did

of

the

lefs

clea

The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c. 233

Year following, 1709, took effectual measures for

The Patentees observing that the Benefit Plays, of the Actors, towards the latter End of the Season, brought the most crowded Audiences in the Year; began to think their own Interests too much neglected by these partial Favours of the Town, to their Actors; and therefore judged, it would not be impolitick, in such wholesome annual profits, to have a Fellow-seeling with them. Accordingly, an Indultowas laid on one Third, out of the profits of every Benefit, for the proper Use, and Behoof of the Patent. But, that a clear Judgment may be formed of the Equity, or Hardship of this Imposition, it will be necessary to shew from whence and from what causes, the Actors claim to Benefits originally proceeded.

e

During the Reign of King Charles, an Actor's Benefit had never been heard of. The first Indulgence of this Kind, was given to Mrs. Barry (as has been formerly observed) in King James's Time, in confideration of the extraordinary Applause, that had followed her performance: But there this Fayour rested, to her alone, 'till after the Division of the only Company in 1695, at which Time the Patentees were foon reduced to pay their Actors, half in good Words and half in ready Money. In this precarious condition, fome particular Actors (however binding their Agreements might be) were too poor, or too wife to go to Law with a Lawyer; and therefore rather chose to compound their Arrears, for their being admitted to the chance of having them made up, by the profits of a Benefit Play. This Expedient had this consequence; That the Patentees, though their daily Audiences, might, and did fometimes mend, still kept the short Subsistance of their Actors, at a stand, and grew more steady in their Resolution so to keep them, as they found them less apt to mutiny, while their Hopes of being cleared off, by a Benefit, were depending. In a Year

Year or two these Benefits grew so advantageous, that they became at last, the chief Article, in every Actor's Agreement.

Now though the Agreements of these united Actors, I am speaking of in 1708, were as yet, only Verbal; yet that made no difference in the honest Obligation, to keep them: But, as Honour at that Time happened to have but a loofe Hold of their Consciences, the Patentees rather chose to give it the flip, and went on with their Work without it. No Actor, therefore, could have his Benefit fixed 'till he had first figned a Paper, fignifying his voluntary Acceptance of it, upon the above conditions, any claims from custom, to the contrary, notwithstanding. Several at first refused to fign this Paper; upon which the next in Rank were offered on the same conditions, to come before the Refusers, this smart Expedient got fome few of the fearful the preference to their Seniors; who at last, seeing the Time was too short for a present Remedy, and that they must either come into the Boat, or lose their Tide, were forced to comply, with what, they, as yet, filently, refented as the severest Injury. In this Situation, therefore, they chose to let the principal Benefits be over, that their Grievances might swell into some Bulk, before they made any Application for Redress to the Lord Chamberlain; who, upon hearing their general complaint, ordered the Patentees to shew cause, why their Benefits had been diminished one Third, contrary to the common Usage? The Patentees pleaded the signed Agreement, and the Actors Receipts of the other two Thirds, in full Satisfaction. But these were prov'd to have been exacted from them, by the Methods already mentioned. They notwithstanding infift upon them as lawful. But as Law, and Equity do not always agree, they were looked upon as unjust, and arbitrary. Whereupon the Patentees were warn'd at their Peril, to refuse the Actors full Satisfaction. But here it was thought necessary, that Judgment should be for some Time respited, 'till the Actors,

U

p

a

0 qu

Wi

of

aft

tur a v

clir

ftre

chie

And

clin

shou

Ten

fure

his 8

flake

with

than

Actors, who had leave so to do, could form a Body strong enough to make the Inclination of the Lord-

Chamberlain to relieve them, practicable.

t.

.

ft

at

ir

he-

Vo

he

C-

ms

re-

he

to

got

ni-

for

me

m-

the

hey

neir

hey

am-

int,

ene-

the

rned

ther

were Me-

nfift

do

un-

were atif-

udg-

the

tors,

Accordingly Swiney (who was then fole Director of the Opera only) had permission to enter into a private Treaty, with such of the united Actors in Drury-Lane, as might be thought fit to head a Company, under their own Management, and to be Sharers with him in the Hay-Market. The Actors chosen for this Charge, were Wilks, Dogget, Mrs. Oldfield, and Myself. But before I proceed, lest it should seem furprizing, that neither Betterton, Mrs. Barry, Mrs. Bracegirdle, or Booth, were Parties in this Treaty; it must be observ'd, that Betterton was now seventythree, and rather chose, with the Infirmities of Age upon him, to rely on fuch Salary, as might be appointed him, than to involve himself in the Cares, and Hurry, that must unavoidably attend the Regulation of a new Company. As to the two celebrated Actresses I have named, this has been my first proper Occasion of making it known, that they had both quitted the Stage the Year before this Transaction was thought of. And Booth, as yet, was scarce out of his Minority as an Actor, or only in the promise of that Reputation, which in about four or five Years after, he happily arriv'd at. However, at this Juncture, he was not so far overlook'd, as not to be offer'd a valuable Addition to his Salary; But this he declin'd, being, while the Patentees were under this Ditreis as much, if not more, in favour, with their chief Manager, as a Schematift, than as an Actor: And indeed he appear'd, to my Judgment, more inclin'd to risque his Fortune in Drury-Lane, where he should have no Rival in Parts, or Power, than on any Terms to embark in the Hay-Market; where he was fure to meet with Opponents in both. However this his Separation from our Interest, when our All was at take, afterwards kept his Advancement, to a Share with us, in our more successful Days, longer postpon'd han otherwise it probably might have been.

When

When Mrs. Oldfield was nominated as a joint Sharer, in our new Agreement to be made with Swiney; Dogget, who had no Objection to her Merit. infifted that our Affairs could never be upon a secure Foundation, if there was more, than one Sex admitted to the Management of them. He therefore hop'd, that if we offer'd Mrs. Oldfield a Carte Blanche, instead of a Share, she would not think herself slight. ed. This was instantly agreed to, and Mrs. Oldfield receiv'd it rather as a Favour, than a Disobligation: Her Demands therefore were two hundred Pounds a Year certain, and a Benefit clear of all Charges; which were readily fign'd to. Her Eafiness on this Occasion, fome Years after, when our Establishment was in Profperity, made us, with less Reluctancy advance her two hundred Pounds, to three hundred Guineas per Annum. with her usual Benefit, which upon an Average for feveral Years at leaft, doubled that Sum,

When a fufficient Number of Actors were engag'd, under our Confederacy with Swiney, it was then judged a proper Time, for the Lord Chamberlain's Power, to operate, which, by lying above a Month dormant, had so far recover'd the Patentees, from any apprehensions of what might fall upon them, from their late Usurpations on the Benefits of the Actors, that they began to fet their Marks, upon those who had diftinguish'd themselves, in the Application for Redress. Several little Disgraces were put upon them; particularly in the Disposal of Parts, in Plays to be reviv'd, and as visible a Partiality was shewn in the Promotion of those in their Interest, though their Endeavours to ferve them could be of no extraordinary Use. How often does History shew us, in the same State of Courts, the fame Politicks have been practis'd? All this while the other Party were passively filent; 'till one Day, the Actor who particularly folicited their Cause, at the Lord Chamberlain's Office, being shewn there the order fign'd, for absolutely filencing the Patentees, and ready to be ferv'd, flew back with the News to his Companions, then at the Rehearfal, in which he had been wanted; when being call'd to

his

C

0

G

Ch

Sh Special Rec

App [po] be c

riou

fon,

T

ng,

but o

He

ave e

night

awye

ncline

gainst

mad

his Part, and something hastily question'd by the Patentee, for his Neglect of Business: This Actor, I say, with an erected Look, and a Theatrical Spirit at once threw off the Mask, and roundly told him Sir, I have now no more Business here, than you have; in half an Hour, you will neither have Actors to command, nor Authority, to employ them-Patentee, who though he could not readily comprehend his mysterious manner of Speaking, had just a Glimpse of Terror enough from the Words, to soften his Reproof into a cold formal Declaration, That if be would not do his Work, he should not be paid ---But now, to complete the Catastrophe of these Theatrical Commotions, enters the Messenger, with the Order of Silence in his Hand, whom the same Actor officiously introduc'd, telling the Patentee, that the Gentleman wanted to speak with him, from the Lord-Chamberlain. When the Messenger had delivered the Order, the Actor throwing his head over his Shoulder, towards the Patentee, in the manner of Shakespear's Harry the Eighth to Cardinal Wolsey, cry'd-Read o'er that! and now—to Breakfast, with what Appetite you may. Though these Words might be poken, in too vindictive, and infulting a Manner, to te commended; yet from the Fulness of a Heart injurously treated, and now reliev'd by that instant Occaion, why might they not be pardon'd?

1-

t.

ld

1:

a

ch

n,

01-

ON

m,

fe-

'd, nen

W-

int,

ore-

rien

hat

Re-

m;

o be

the

Ennary State

All

'till

their

hewn

e Pa-

h the

l'd to

The Authority of the Patent now no longer subsisting, all the confederating Actors immediately walk'd out of the House, to which they never return'd, 'till hey became themselves the Tenants, and Masters of Here again, we see an higher Instance of the Auhority of a Lord-Chamberlain, than any of those I ave elsewhere mentioned: From whence that Power night be deriv'd, as I have already said, I am not awyer enough to know; however it is evident that awyer obey'd it, though to his Cost; which might cline, one to think, that the Law was not clearly gainst it: Be that as it may, since the Law has latemade it no longer a Question, let us drop the Enquiry

258 The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c.

Enquiry, and proceed to the Facts, which follow's this Order, that filenc'd the Patent.

From this last injudicious Disagreement of the Patentees with their principal Actors, and from what they had suffered on the same Occasion, in the Division of their only Company in 1695, might we not imagine there was something of Infatuation, in their Management? For though I allow Actor, in general, when they are too much indulg'd, or govern'd by an unfteady Head, to be as unrulya Multitude as a Power can be plagued with; yet there is a Medium, which, if cautiously observed by a candid Use of Power, making them always know, without feeling their Superior, neither suffering their Encroachments, nor invading their Rights, with an immovable Adherence to the accepted Laws, they are to walk by; such a Regulation, I say, has never fail'd in my Observation, to have made them a tractable, and profitable Society. If the Government of a well - establish'd Theatre were to be compar'd to that of a Nation; there is no one Act of Policy, or Misconduct in the one, or the other, in which the Manager might not, in some parallell Case (laugh, if you please) be equally applauded, or condemned with the Statef-Perhaps this will not be found fo wild a Conceit, if you look into the 193d Tatler, Vol. 4. where the Affairs of the State, and those of the very Stage, which I am now treating of, are, in a Letter from Downs the Prompter, compar'd, and with a great deal of Wit, and Humdur, fet upon an equal Foot of Policy. The Letter is supposed to have been written in the last Change of the Ministry in Queen Anne's Time. I will therefore venture, upon the Authority of that Author's Imagination, to carry the Comparison as high, as it can possibly go, and fay, That as I remember one of our Princes, in the last Century, to have lost his Crown, by too arbitrary a Use of his Power, though he knew how fatal the fame Measures had been to his unhappy Father before him; why should we wonder, that the fame Paffions

1

B

org

Si

Il'a

d ucl t d

hic

dn

Colu

y At

teni y d

Tion

it A

mit

ys,

ng fich

out f

15-6

The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c. 239.

Paffions taking Possession of Men, in lower Life, by an equally impolitick Usage of their Theatrical Subjects, should have involved the Patentees, in proportionable Calamities.

4

2-

A)

we on,

ors,

10

y a

yet ved

ays

fuf-

heir

action,

So-

ish'd

ion;

A in

night

eafe

tatef-

ild a

01. 4.

the

in a

and

upon

s'd w inistry

upon

car-

o, and

in the

oitrary al the

er be-

fame

Paffions

During the Vacation, which immediately follow'd he Silence of the Patent, both Parties were at Leisure o form their Schemes for the Winter: For the Patente would still hold out, notwithstanding his being so niserably maim'd, or over-match'd: He had no more legard to Blows, than a blind Cock of the Game; he might be beaten, but would never yield, the Patent was still in his Possession, and the Broad-seal to it vibly as fresh as ever: Beside, he had yet some Actors in his Service, at a much cheaper Rate than hose who had left him, the Salaries of which last ow they would not work for him, he was not oblig'd pay. In this way of thinking, he still kept together ch as had not been invited over to the Hay-Market, had been influenc'd by Booth, to follow his Fortune

Drury-Lane.

By the Patentee's keeping these Remains of his broken press together, it is plain that he imagin'd this Order Silence, like others of the fame Kind, would be re-I'd of Course, after a reasonable Time of Obedience d been paid to it: But it feems, he had rely'd too uch upon former Precedents; nor had his Politicks t div'd into the Secret, that the Court-power, with hich the Patent had been fo long, and often at Variance, d now a Mind to take the publick Diversions more, folutely into their own Hands: Not that I have fronger Reasons for this Conjecture than that the tent, never after this Order of Silence, got leave to y during the Queen's Reign. But upon the Aclion of his late Majesty, Power having then a diffet Aspect, the Patent found no Difficulty in being mitted to exercise its former Authority for acting ys, &c. which however from this Time of their ng still, in 1709, did not happen 'till 1714, and ich the old Patentee never liv'd to see: For he dy'd out fix Weeks before the new-built Theatre in Lin-'s-Inn-Fields was open'd, where the first Play acted was the Recruiting-Officer, under the Management of his Heirs, and Successors. But of that Theatre, it is not yet Time to give any further Account.

The first Point resolv'd on, by the Comedians now re-establish'd in the Hay-Market, was to alter the Auditory Part of their Theatre; the Inconveniencies of which have been fully enlarg'd upon in a former Chapter. What embarrass'd them most in this De. fign, was their want of Time to do it in a more complete manner, than it now remains in, otherwise they had brought it to the original Model of that in Dryry-Lane, only in a larger Proportion, as the wider Walls of it would require; as there are not many Spectators who may remember what Form the Drury Lane Theatre stood in, about forty Years ago, before the old Patentee, to make it hold more Money, took it in his Head to alter it, it were but Justice to lay the original Figure, which Sir Christopher Wren first gare it, and the Alterations of it, now standing in a fair Light; that equal Spectators may fee, if they were at their Choice, which of the Structures would incline them to a Preference. But in this Appeal, I only fpeak to fuch Spectators as allow a good Play, well acted, to be the most valuable Entertainment of the Stage. Whether fuch Plays (leaving the Skill of the dead, or living Actors equally out of the Question have been more or less, recommended in their Presen tation, by either of these different Forms of that Tha tre, is our present matter of Enquiry.

ci

lo

to ta

Vo

eit

wit

wh

es a

for

ay,

ave mlil

f th ad

Day

sit

arri

tinal his I

It must be observ'd then, that the Area, or Pla form of the old Stage, projected about four Foot for warder, in a Semi-oval Figure, parallel to the Be ches of the Pit; and that the former, lower Doors Entrance for the Actors, were brought down between the two foremost (and then only) Pilasters; in the Place of which Doors, now the two Stage-Boxes are fa That where the Doors of Entrance now are, the formerly flood two additional Side-wings, in Front a full Set of Scenes, which had then almost a doub Effect, in their Loftiness, and Magnificence.

By this original Form, the usual Station of the Actors, in almost every Scene, was advanc'd at least ten-Foot nearer to the Audience, than they now can be; because, not only from the Stage's being shorten'd, in Front, but likewise from the additional Interposition of those Stage-Boxes, the Actors (in respect to the Spectators, that fill them) are kept so much more backward from the main Audience, than they us'd to be: But when the Actors were in Possession of that forwarder Space, to advance upon, the Voice was then more in the Centre of the House, so that the most distant Ear had scarce the least Doubt, or Dissiculty in hearing what fell from the weakest Utterance: All Objects were thus drawn nearer to the Sense; every painted Scene was stronger; every Grand Scene and Dance more extended; every rich, or fine-coloured Habit had a more lively Lustre: Nor was the minutest Motion of a Feature (properly changing with the Passion, or Humour it suited) ever loft, as they frequently must be in the Obscurity of too great a Diftance: And how valuable an Advantage the Facility of hearing distinctly, is to every wellacted Scene, every common Spectator is a Judge. A Voice scarce rais'd above the Tone of a Whisper, either in Tenderness, Resignation, innocent Distress, or lealoufy funoress'd, often have as much concern with the Heart, as the most clamorous Passions; and when on any of these Occasions, such affecting Speechs are plainly heard, or loft, how wide is the Diffetence, from the great or little Satisfaction received from them? To all this a Master of a Company may by, I now receive ten Pounds more, than could have been taken formerly, in every full House! Not mlikely. But might not his House be oftner full, f the Auditors were oftner pleas'd? Might not every ad House too, by a Possibility of being made every Day better, add as much to one Side of his Account, s it could take from the other? If what I have faid, arries any Truth in it, why might not the orisinal Form of this Theatre be restor'd? But let his Digression avail what it may, the Actors now re-

of is now Auncies mer

Decomthey Dru-

many rurypefore

took y the gave a fair

were ncline I only well of the of the restion

Thea or Plat oot for ne Ber

Doors of the Place are fix

Front double

turn'd to the Hay-Market, as I have observ'd, wanted nothing but length of time to have govern'd their Alter ration of that Theatre, by this original Model of Dru. ry-Lane, which I have recommended. As their Time therefore was short, they made their best use of it: they did fomething to it: They contracted its Wide. ness, by three Ranges of Boxes on each Side, and brought down its enormous high Cieling, within fo proportionable a Compass, that it effectually cured those hollow Undulations of the Voice formerly com. plain'd of. The Remedy had its Effect, their Audiences exceeded their Expectation. There was now no other Theatre open against them; they had the Town to themselves; they were their own Masters, and the Profits of their Industry came into their own Pockets.

Yet with all this fair Weather, the Season of their uninterrupted Prosperity was not yet arriv'd; for the great Expence, and thinner Audiences of the Opera (of which they then were equally Directors) was a constant draw-back upon their Gains, yet not fo far, but that their Income this Year, was better than in their late Station, at Drury-Lane. But by the short Experience we had then had of Operas; by the high Reputation they feem'd to have been arriv'd at, the Year before; by their Power of drawing the whole Body of Nobility, as by Enchantment, to their Solemnities; by that Prodigality of Expence, at which they were fo willing to support them; and from the late extraordinary Profits Saviney had made of them, what Mountains did we not hope from this Mole-hill? But alas! the fairy Vision was vanish'd, this bridal Beauty was grown familiar to the general Taste, and Satiety began to make Excuses for its want of Appetite: Or what is still stronger, its late Admirers now as much valued their Judgment, in being able to find out the Faults of the Performers, as they had before, in dif covering their Excellencies. The Truth is, that this kind of Entertainment being so intirely sensual, it had no Possibility of getting the better of our Reason, but by its Novelty; and that Novelty could never be fup.

h

L

L

20

C

th

a

in

the

wh

tue

Sin

Ope

wer

rao

hei

mad

The Life of Mr. Colley CIBBER, &c. 243

fupported but by an annual Change of the best Voices, which like the finest Flowers, bloom but for a Seafon, and when that is over, are only dead Nose-gays. From this Natural Cause, we have seen within these two Years, even Farinelli singing to an Audience of sive and thirty Pounds; and yet, if common Fame may be credited, the same Voice, so neglected in one Country, has in another had Charms sufficient to make that Crown sit easy, on the Head of a Monarch, which the Jealousy of Politicians (who had their Views, in his keeping it) fear'd without some such extraordinary Amusement, his Satiety of Empire might tempt him, a fecond Time, to refign.

ed

C

14.

ne

t;

le-

ind

10 red

midi-

the

ers,

nwo

heir

the

t fo

n in

Ex-

r be-

No-

; by

re fo

ordi-

loun-

alas!

y was

y be-

: Or

much

ut the n dif

t this

ual, it

leafon,

ver be

fup.

There is too, in the very Species of an Italian Singer, fuch an innate, fantastical Pride, and Caprice, that the Government of them (here at least) is almost impracticable. This Distemper, as we were not fufficiently warn'd, or appriz'd of, threw our mufical Affairs into Perplexities, we knew not eafily how to get out of. There is fcarce a fensible Auditor, in the Kingdom, that has not, fince that Time. had Occasion to laugh at the several Instances of it: But what is still more ridiculous, these costly Canary-Birds have sometimes infested the whole Body of our dignified Lovers of Mufick, with the same childish Animosities: Ladies have been known to decline their Vifits, upon account of their being of a different musical Party. Cafar and Pompey made not a warmer Division, in the Roman Republick, than those Heroines, their Country Women, the Faustina and Cuzzoni blew up in our Common-wealth, of Academical Musick, by their implacable Pretentions to Superiority ! And while this Greatness of Soul is their unalterable Virthe, it will never be practicable to make two capital... Singers of the fame Sex, do as they should do, in one Opera, at the same Time! no, not tho' England were to double the Sums it has already thrown after hem: For even in their own Country, where an exraordinary Occasion has called a greater Number of heir best, to sing together, the Mischief they have hade has been proportionable; an Instance of which, if I am rightly inform'd, happen'd at Parma, where upon the Celebration of the Marriage of that Dake. a Collection was made of the most eminent Voices. that Expence, or Interest could purchase, to give as complete an Opera, as the whole vocal Power of Italy could form. But when it came to the Proof of this mufical Project, behold! what woeful Work they made of it! Every Performer would be a Caefar, or nothing; their feveral Pretensions to Preference were not to be limited within the Laws of Harmony; they would all chuse their own Songs, but not more to set off themselves, than to oppose, or deprive another of an Occasion to shine: Yet any one would sing a bad Song, provided no body else had a good one, till at last, they were thrown together like so many feather'd Warriors, for a Battle-royal, in a Cock-pit, where every one was oblig'd to kill another, to fave himfelf! What pity it was these froward Misses, and Masters of Musick had not been engag'd to entertain the Court of some King of Merocco, that could have known a good Opera, from a bad one! with how much Ease would such a Director have brought them to better Order? But alas! as it has been faid of greater Things,

Y 2

7

Suis et ipfa Roma viribus ruit.

Hor.

i

it

gr ty

of fer

Hi

Me

his

littl

fuffi

fol,

Gov

got

enou

Ving

Acto

Imperial Rome fell, by the too great Strength of its own Citizens! So fell this mighty Opera, ruin'd by the too great Excellency of its Singers! For, upon the whole, it prov'd to be as barbaroully bad, as if Malice itself had compos'd it.

Now though something of this Kind, equally provoking, has generally embarrass'd the State of Operas, these thirty Years, yet it was the Missortune of the managing Actors, at the Hay-Market, to have selt the first Effects of it: The Honour of the Singer, and the Interest of the Undertaker were so often at Variance, that the latter began to have but a bad Bargain of it. But not to impute more to the Caprice of those Performers, than was really true, there were two different Accidents,

,

13

f

of 10

re

ey

et

of

ad

at

r'd

ere

f!

ers

he

ve

WO

em

ter

.

its

by

the

Vla-

-010

pe-

e of

felt

and

nce,

it.

for-

Acnts,

eidents, that drew Numbers from our Audiences, before the Seafon was ended; which were another Company permitted to act in Drury-Lane, and the long Trial of Doctor Sacheverel, in Westminster-Hall: By the way it must be observ'd, that this Company was not under the Direction of the Patent (which continued fill filenc'd) but was fet up by a third Interest, with a License from Court. The Person to whom this new License was granted, was William Collier, Esq ; a ! Lawyer of an enterprizing Head, and a jovial Heart ; what fort of Favour he was in, with the People, then, in Power, may be judg'd, from his being often admitted to partake with them those detach'd Hours of Life, when Business was to give way to Pleasure: But this was not all his Merit, he was, at the fame Time, a Member of Parliament for Truro in Cornwall, and we cannot suppose a Person so qualified could be refus'd fuch a Trifle, as a License to head a broken Company of Actors. This fagacious Lawyer, then, who had a Lawyer to deal with, observing that his Antagonist kept Possession of a Theatre, without making use of it, and for which he was not oblig'd to pay Rent, unless he actually did use it, wisely conceived it might be the Interest of the joint Landlords, fince their Tenement was in fo precarious a Condition, to grant a Lease to one who had an undisputed Authority, to be liable, by acting Plays in it, to pay the Rent of it; especially when he tempted them with an Offer of raising it from three, to four Pounds per Diem. His Project succeeded, the Lease was fign'd; but the Means of getting into Possession were to be left to his own Cost, and Differetion. This took him up but little Time, he immediately laid Siege to it, with a fufficient Number of Forces, whether lawless or lawful, I forget, but they were fuch as oblig'd the old Governor to give it up; who, notwithstanding had got Intelligence of his Approaches, and Defign, time. enough to carry off every Thing that was worth moving, except a great Number of old Scenes, and new Actors, that could not eafily followhim.

Adudicrous Account of this Transaction, under fictition Names, may be found in the ooth Tatler, Vol. 2. which this Explanation may now render more intelligible, to the Readers of that agreeable Author.

This other new License being now in Possession of the Drury-Lane Theatre; those Actors, whom the Patentee, ever fince the Order of Silence, had retain'd in a State of Inaction, all to a Man came over to the Service of Collier. Of these, Booth was then the chief. The Merit of the rest had as yet made no considerable Appearance, and as the Patentee had not left a Rag of their cloathing behind him, they were but poorly equip'd for a publick Review; consequently at their first Opening, they were very little able to annoy us. But during the Trial of Sacheverel, our Audiences were extremely weaken'd, by the better Rank of People's daily attending it: While, at the same Time, the lower Sort, who were not equally admitted to that grand Spectacle, as eagerly crowded into Drury-Lane, to a new Comedy, called The fair Quaker of Deal. This Play, having some low Strokes of natural Humour in it, was rightly calculated, for the Capacity of the Actors, who play'd it, and to the Tafte of the Multitude, who were now more dispos'd, and at leisure to see it: But the most happy Incident in its Fortune was the Charm of the fair Quaker, which was acted by Miss Santlow, (afterwards Mrs. Booth) whose Person was then in the full Bloom of what Beauty she might pretend to: Before this, the had only been admired as the most excellent Dancer; which, perhaps, might pot a little contribute to the favourable Reception, the now met with as an Actress, in this Character, which so happily suited her Figure, and Capacity: The gentle Softness of her Voice, the compos'd Innocence of her Afpect, the Modesly of her Dress, the reservid Decency of her Gesture, and the Simplicity of the Sentiments, that naturally fell from her, made her feem the amiable Maid the represented: In a Word, not the enthusiastick Maid of Orleans, was more ferviceable of old, to the French Army, when the Englife

G

ce of

Pn ha

tate

the.

es.

rok

eiv luct.

onfo ow

The Life of Mr. Coller Cisses, &c. 247

had diffres'd them, than this fair Quaker was, at the Head of that dramatick Attempt, upon which the Support of their weak Society depended.

of

a-

in

he

ef.

ag

us, en-

of

me,

that

e, to

r in

Ac-

ude, e it:

the

Mis

was

pre-

ed as

night

n, the

The

cence

ferv'd

f the

le her

Word,

e fer-

e Eng-

But when the Trial, I have mention'd, and the Run of this Play was over, the Tide of the Town beginning to turn again in our Favour, Collier was reduc'd to give his Theatrical Affairs a different Scheme; which advanc'd the Stage another Step towards that Settlement, which, in my Time, was of the longest Duration.

CHAP. XIII.

The Patentee, having now no Actors, rebuilds the new Theatre in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. A Guess at his Reasons for it. More Changes, in the State of the Stage. The Beginning of its better Days under the Triumvirate of Actors. A Sketch of their governing Characters.

A S coarse Mothers may have comely Children; fo Anarchy has been the Parent of many a good Government; and by a Parity of possible Consequences we shall find, that from the frequent Convulsions of the Stage, arose, at last, its longest Settlement, and Prosperity; which many of my Readers (or if I should happen to have but sew of them, many of my Spectators, at least) who, I hope, have not yet liv'd half their Time, will be able to remember.

Though the Patent had been often under Distrefes, it had never felt any Blow, equal to this unrecked Order of Silence; which it is not easy to concive could have fallen upon any other Person's Concive, than that of the old Patentee: For if he was onscious, of his being under the Subjection of that ower, which had silenc'd him, why would he incur

the

the Danger of a Suspension, by his so obstinate, and impolitick Treatment of his Actors? If he thought fuch Power over him illegal, how came he to obey it now, more than before, when he flighted a former Order, that injoyn'd him to give his Actors their Benefits on their usual Conditions? but to do him Juflice, the same Obstinacy, that involv'd him in these Difficulties, at last, preserv'd to his Heirs the Property of the Patent, in its full Force and Value; yet to suppose that he foresaw a milder Use of Power, in some future Prince's Reign, might be more favourable to him, is begging at best but a cold Question. But whether he knew that this broken Condition of the Patent, would not make his troublesome Friends, the Adventurers fly from it as from a falling House, seems not so difficult a Question. However, let the Reader form his own Judgment of them, from the Facts, that follow'd: It must therefore be observ'd, that the Adventurers feldom came near the House, but when there was some visible Appearance of a Dividend: But I could never hear, that upon an ill Run of Audiences, they had ever returned, or brought in a fingle Shilling, to make good the Deficiencies of their daily Receipts. Therefore, as the Patentee, in Possession, had alone, for feveral Years, supported, and stood against this Uncertainty of Fortune, it may be imagin'd, that his Accounts were under fo voluminous a Perplexity, that few of those Adventurers would have Leisure or Capacity enough to unravel them: And as they had formerly thrown away their Time, and Money at Law, in a fruitless Enquiry into them, they now seem'd to have entirely given up their Right and Interest : And, according to my best Information, notwithstanding the subsequent Gains of the Patent have been sometimes extraordinary, the farther Demands, or Claims of Right of the Adventurers have lain dormant, above these five and twenty Years.

Having shewn by what means Collier had disposses'd likewife

ta

ph

ot

Ap

to .

we Exp

to d little

erru

ally

Af

Force

heir l

hree ut an

ollier

blig'd ne Sta

ppor

loath

larers

likewise of those few Actors, which he had kept, for fome Time unemploy'd in it; we are now led to confider another Project of the same Patentee, which, if we are to judge of by the Event, has shewn him more a wife than a weak Man; which I confess, at the Time he put it in Execution, feem'd not so clear a Point: For notwithstanding he now saw the Authority, and Power of his Patent was superseded, or was at best but precarious, and that he had not one Actor left, in his Service; yet under all these Dilemmas, and Distresses, he resolv'd upon rebuilding the New Theatre in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, of which he had taken Leafe, at a low Rent, ever fince Betterton's Company had first left it. This Conduct seem'd too deep for my Comprehension! What are we to think of his taking this Leafe, in the Height of his Prosperity. when he could have no Occasion for it? Was he a Prophet? Could he then foresee, he should, one time or other, be turn'd out of Drury-Lane? Or did his mere Appetite of Architecture urge him to build a House, while he could not be fure, he should ever have leave to make use of it? But of all this, we may think as we please; whatever was his Motive, he, at his own Expence, in this Interval of his having nothing elfe to do, rebuilt that Theatre from the Ground, as it is now standing. As for the Order of Silence, he feem'd little concern'd at it, while it gave him so much uninterrupted Leisure to supervise a Work, which he natually took Delight in.

t

-

e

I

S, ts.

10

n-

his

hat

Ca-

for-

aw,

to

nd,

ling

me-

aims

bove lefs'd

but

ewil

After this Defeat of the Patentee, the Theatrical forces of Collier in Drury-Lane, notwithstanding heir having drawn the Multitude after them, for about aree Weeks, during the Trial of Suchewerel, had made ut an indifferent Campaign, at the End of the Season. ollier, at least, found so little Account in it, that it olig'd him to push his Court Interest (which, wherever he Stage was concern'd, was not inconsiderable) to pport him in another Scheme; which was, that consideration of his giving up the Drury Lane, loaths, Scenes, and Actors, to Swiney, and his joint Parers, in the Hay-Market, he (Collier) might be

put

put into an equal Possession of the Hay-Market, Theatre, with all the Singers, &c. and be made sole Director of the Opera. Accordingly by permission of the Lord-Chamberlain, a Treaty was enter'd into, and in a few Days ratisfied by all Parties, conformable to the said Preliminaries. This was that happy Crisis of Theatrical Liberty, which the labouring Comedians had long sigh'd for; and which, for above twenty Years sollowing, was so memorably fortunate to them.

However, there were two hard Articles, in this Treaty, which though it might be Policy in the Actors, to comply with, yet the Imposition of them seem'd little less despotick, than a Tax upon the Poor, when a

f

t

b

to

of

al

fai

pr.

on

an

and

Mo

the

An

wh

ten

get

ing

It W

we :

don,

ftrud

Wor

Government did not want it.

The first of these Articles was, That whereas the sole License for acting Plays, was presum'd to be a more profitable Authority, than that for acting Operas only; that therefore two hundred Pounds a Year should be paid to Collier, while Master of the Opera, by the Comedians; to whom a Verbal Assurance was given by the Plenipo's on the Court-side, that while such Payment substited, no other Company should be permitted to act Plays against them, within the Liberties, &c. The other Article was, That on every Wednesday, whereon an Opera could be perform'd, the Plays should, toties quoties, be silent at Drury-Lane, to give the Opera a fairer Chance, for a sull House.

This last Article, however partial, in the Intention, was in its Effect, of great Advantage to the sharing Actors: For in all publick Entertainments, a Day's abstinence naturally increases the Appetite to them: Our every Thursday's Audience, therefore, was visibly the better, by thus making the Day before it a Fast. But as this was not a Favour design'd us, this prohibition of a Day, methinks, deserves a little farther Notice; because it evidently took a fixth Part of their Income, from all the hired Actors, who were only paid, in proportion to the Number of acting Days. This extraordinary Regard to Operas, was in effect making the Day-labouring Actors the principal Subscribers to them, and the shutting out People from the Play every Wednesday, many murmured at, as an Abridgment of their usual Liberty. And tho' I was one of those who profited by that Order, it ought not to bribe me, into a Concealment of what was then faid and thought of it. I remember a Nobleman of the first Rank, then in a high Post, and not out of Court-Favour, faid openly behind the Scenes - It was shameful to take part of the Actors Bread from them to Support the filly Diversion of People of Quality. But alas! what was all this Grievance, when weighed against the Qualifications of fo grave, and stanch a Senator, as Collier ? Such visible Merit, it seems, was to be made easy, tho' at the Expence of the-I had almost faid, Honour of the Court, whose gracious Intention for the Theatrical Common-wealth, might have shone with thrice the Lustre, if such a paltry Price had not been paid for it. But as the Government of the Stage is but that of the World in Miniature, we ought not to have wondered, that Collier had Interest enough to quarter the Weakness of the Opera upon the Strength of the Comedy. General good Intentions are not always practicable to a Perfection. The most necesfary Law can hardly pass, but a Tenderness to some private Interest, shall often hang such Exceptions upon particular Clauses, 'till at last it comes out lame, and lifeless, with the Loss of half its Force, Purpose, and Dignity. As for Instance; how many fruitless Motions have been made in Parliaments, to moderate the enormous Exactions, in the Practice of the Law? And what fort of Justice must that be call'd, which, when a Man has not a Mind to pay you a Debt of ten Pounds, it shall cost you Fifty, before you can get it? How long too, has the Publick being labouring for a Bridge at Westminster? But the Wonder, that it was not built an hundred Years ago, ceases, when we are told that the Fear of making one End of London, as rich, as the other, has been, fo long, an Ob. firuction to it: And though it might feem a still greater Wonder, when a new Law for building one had at last

n

got over that apprehension, that it should meet with any farther Delay; yet Experience has shewn us, that the Structure of this useful Ornament to our Metropolis has been so clog'd by private Jobs, that were to be pick'd out of the Undertaking, and the Progress of the Work so disconcerted by a tedious Contention of private Interests, and Endeavours to impose upon the Publick, abominable Bargains, that a whole Year was lost, before a single Stone could be laid to its Foundation. But Posterity will owe its praises, to the Zeal, and Resolution of a truly Noble Commissioner, whose distinguish'd Impatience has broke thro' those narrow Artifices, those salse and frivolous Objections, that delay'd it, and has already began to raise, above the Tide, that future Monument of his publick Spirit.

How far all this may be allowed applicable to the State of the Stage, is not of fo great Importance, nor fo much my Concern, as that what is observ'd upon it should always remain a memorable Truth, to the Honour of that Nobleman. But now I go on: Collier being thus posses'd of his Musical Government, thought his best way would be to farm it out to a Gentleman, Aaron Hill, Esq; (who, he had Reason to suppose, knew something more of Theatrical Matter, than himself) at a Rent, if I mistake not, of six hundred Pounds per Annum: But before the Season was ended (upon what Occasion, if I could remember, it might not be material to fay) took it into his Hands again: But all his skill, and Interest, could not raise the Direction of the Opera, to so good a Post, as he thought due to a Person of his Consideration: He therefore, the Year following, enter'd upon another highhanded Scheme, which, 'till the Demise of the Queen, turn'd to his better Account.

After the Comedians were in possession of Drury-Lane, from whence, during my Time upon the Stage, they never departed; their Swarm of Audiences exceeded all that had been seen, in thirty Years before; which, however, I do not impute so much to the Exceltence of their Acting, as to their indefatigable Industry,

b

h

36

m

of

in

Pl

Po hir

thi

hac

Cal

of able

a.F

the Act

thar

ded

tres.

felf,

who

Choi

finkii

ceipts thort

Sa

duffry, and good Management; for, as I have often! faid. I never thought, in the general, that we flood in any Place of Comparison with the eminent Actors before us; perhaps too, by there being now an End of the frequent Divisions, and Disorders, that had from Time to Time broke in upon, and frustrated their Labours, not a little might be contributed to their Suctel, and Contem it deferves from all that cels.

Collier, then, like a true liquorish Courtier, observing the Prosperity of a Theatre, which he the Year before, had parted with for a worle, began to meditate an Exchange of Theatrical Posts with Swiney, who had visibly very fair Pretentions to that he was in, by his being first chosen, by the Court, to regulate, and rescue the Stage from the Disorders it had suffer'd under its former Managers : Yet Collier knew that fort of Merit could fland in no Competition, with his being a Member of Parliament of He therefore had Recourse to his Court-Interest (where mere Will, and Pleasure; at that Time, was the only Law, that difpos'd of all Theatrical Rights) to oblige Swing to let him be off, from his bad Bargain, for a better. To this, it may be imagin'd Swiney demun'd, and as he had Reason, strongly remonstrated against it: But as Collier had listed his Conscience under the Command of Interest, he kept it to strict Duty, and was immoveable; infomuch, that Sir John Vanburgh, who was a Friend to Saviney, and who by his Intimacy with the People in Power, better knew the Motive of their Actions, advis'd Swiney rather to accept of the Change. than by a Non-compliance to hazard his being excluded from any Post, or Concern in either of the Theatres; To conclude, it was not long before Collier had procured a new License for acting Plays, &c. for himfelf, Wilks, Dogger, and Cibber, exclusive of Swiner, who by this new Regulation was reduc'd to his Hobson's Choice of the Opera.

t

t,

n-

to

n-

725

it

nds

rife

he ege.

gh-

een,

217

age,

ex-

ore; ccel-

Inftry,

Swiney being thus transferr'd to the Opera, in the finking condition Collier had left it, found the Receipts of it, in the Winter following 1711, fo far hort of the Expences, that he was driven to attend his Fortune in some more favourable Climate, where he remain'd twenty Years an Exile, from his Friends, and Country; tho' there has been scarce an English Gentleman, who in his Tour of France, or Italy, has not renew'd, or created an Acquaintance with him. As this is a Circumstance, that many People may have forgot, I cannot remember it, without that Regard, and Concern it deserves from all that know him: Yet it is some Mitigation of his Missortune, that since his Return to England, his grey Hairs, and cheerful Disposition have still found a general Welcome among his foreign, and former domestick Acquaintance.

Collier being now, first-commission'd Manager with the Comedians, drove them too, to the last Inch of a hard Bargain (the natural Consequence of all Treaties between Power and Necessity) He not only demanded fix hundred a Year, neat Money, the Price at which he had farmed out his Opera, and to make the Bufiness a fine Cure to him; but likewise infisted, upon a Moiety of the two hundred, that had been levied upon as the Year before, in Aid of the Operas; in all 700 !. These large and ample Conditions, confidering in what Hands we were, we refolv'd to fwallow without wry Faces; rather chufing to run any Hazard, than contend with a formidable Power, against which we had no Remedy: But so it happen'd, that Fortune took better Care of our Interest, than we ourselves had like to have done: For had Collier accepted of our first Offer, of an equal Share with us; he had got three hundred Pounds a Year more by complying with it, than by the Sum he imposed upon us; our Shares being never less, than a thousand annually, to each of us, till the End of the Queen's Reign, in 1714. After which Collier's Commission was superfeded; his Theatrical Post, upon the Accession of his late Majesty, being given to Sir Richard Steele.

From these various Revolutions, in the Government of the Theatre, all owing to the Patentees mistaken Principle of increasing their Profits, by too far enslaving their People, and keeping down

the

i

(

fa fo

g

di

w

in

Ib

for tak

Th

Sha

Cha

C

tain

Will

Man

G

duct

Time

as A

eaft

had t he C

natur

Acco

the Price of good Actors (and I could almost infift, that giving large Salaries to bad Ones, could not have had a worse Consequence) I say, when it is consider'd, that the Authority for acting Plays, &c. was thought of fo little worth, that (as has been obferv'd) Sir Thomas Skipwith gave away his Share of it, and the Adventurers had fled from it; that Mr. Congreve, at another Time, had voluntarily refign'd it, and Sir John Vanburgh (meerly to get the Rent of his new House paid) had, by Leave of the Court, farm'd out his License to Saviney, who not without some Hesitation had ventur'd upon it; let me say again, out of this low Condition of the Theatre, was it not owing to the Industry of three, or four Comedians, that a new Place was now created for the Crown to give away, without any Expence attending it well worth the Acceptance of any Gentleman, whose Merit, or Services had no higher Claim to Preferment, and which Collier, and Sir, Richard Steels, in the two last Reigns, successively enjoy'd ? Though, I believe, I may have faid fomething like this, in a former Chapter, I am not unwilling it should be twice taken notice of.

We are now come to that firm Establishment of the Theatre, which except the Admittance of Booth into a Share, and Dogger's retiring from it, met with no Change, or Alteration, for above twenty Years after.

d,

re

C-

3 ;

n-

Si

ly,

in

er-

his rn-

ees

by

the

Collier, as has been said, having accepted of a certain Appointment of seven Hundred per Annum; Wilks, Dogget, and Myself were now the only acting Managers, under the Queen's License; which being Grant, but during Pleasure, oblig'd us to a Conduct that might not undeserve that Favour. At this Time we were all in the Vigour of our Capacities as Actors; and our Prosperity enabled us, to pay, at least double the Salaries, to what the same Actors and usually receiv'd, or could have hoped for under the Government of the Patentees. Dogget, who was naturally an Oeconomist, kept our Expences, and Accounts to the best of his Power, within regulated Bounds,

Bounds, and Moderation. Wilks, who had a stronger Passion for Glory, than Lucre, was a little apt to be lavish in what was not always as necessary for the Profit, as the Honour of the Theatre : For Example, at the Beginning of almost every Season, he would order two, or three Suits to be made, or refresh'd, for Actors of moderate Consequence, that his having constantly a new one for himself, might feem less particular, tho he had, as yet, no new Part for it. This expeditions Care of doing as good, without waiting for our Consent to it, Dogget always looked upon, with the Eye of a Man, in pain: But I, who hatel pain, tho' I as little liked the Favour, as Dogget himself rather chose to laugh at the Circumstance, than complain of what I knew was not to be cured, but by a Remedy, worse than the Evil. Upon these Occasions, therefore, whenever I saw him, and his Followers fo prettily dress'd out for an old Play, 1 only commended his Fancy; or at most but while per'd him not to give himself so much Trouble, a bout others, upon whose Performance it would be be thrown away : To which with a fmiling Air of Triumph, over my want of Penetration, the has reply'd Why, now, that was what I really did it for! to flew others, that I love to take care of them as well as of myself. Thus whonever he made himsel eafy, he had not the least Conception, let the Expend be what it would, that we could possibly dislike it And from the same Principle, provided a thinner As dience were liberal of their Applaufe, he gave him felf little Concern about the Receipt of it. As in the different Tempers of my Brother-Managers, the might be equally fomething right, and wrong, it w equally my Business to keep well with them both And tho' of the two, I was rather inclin'd to Doggd way of thinking, yet I was always under the difagre able Refraint of not letting Wilks fee it : Therefore when in any material Point of Management, they we ready to come to a Rupture, I found it adviseable think neither of them, absolutely in the wrong; by giving to one as much of the Right, in his Opinio

1

i

h

h

I

(th

Pa

on M

Bo

I

ly

Co

Ou

er,

of

hac

cap

our Peo

Cor

Imp

in c whi

they

Rev

fited

bega

and

d

10

n-

115 ng

on,

ted

gu

ce,

ed, iefe

his

7,1 hif , 2-

but ir of

5 10id it

hem,

mfel

pene

se it A

him

the

the

it W both ogge

agree

refore

y wen

able ! pinio

thi

this way, as I took from the other in that; their Differences were fometimes foft ned into Concessions, that I have Reason to think prevented many ill Consequences, in our Affairs, that otherwise might have attended them. But this was always to be done with a very gentle Hand; for as Wilks was apt to be eafily hurt by Opposition, so when he felt it he was as apt to be insupportable. However, there were some Points. in which we were always unanimous. In the twenty Years, while we were our own Directors, we never had a Creditor that had Occasion to come twice for his Bill; every Monday Morning discharged us of all Demands, before we took a Shilling for our own Use. And from this Time, we neither ask'd any Actor, nor were defired by them, to fign any written Agreement (to the best of my Memory) whatsoever: The Rate of their respective Salaries were only enter'd in our daily Pay Roll; which plain Record every one look'd upon, as good as City-Security: For where an honest Meaning is mutual, the mutual Confidence will be Bond enough, in Conscience, on both Sides: But that I may not ascribe more to our Conduct than was really its Due, I ought to give Fortune her Share of the Commendation; for had not our Success exceeded our Expectation, it might not have been in our Power, so thoroughly to have observ'd those laudable Rules of Oeconomy, Justice, and Lenity, which so happily supported us: But the Severities, and Oppressions we had fuffer'd under our former Masters, made us incapable of imposing them upon others; which gave our whole Society the chearful Looks of a rescued People. But notwithstanding this general Cause of Content, it was not above a Year or two before the Imperfection of human Nature began to shew itself in contrary Symptoms. The Merit of the Hazards which the Managers had run, and the Difficulties they had combated, in bringing to perfection, that Revolution, by which they had all fo amply profited, in the Amendment of their general Income, began now to be forgotten; their Acknowledgments, and thankful Promifes of Fidelity, were no more repeated, or scarce thought obligatory: Ease and Plenty, by an habitual Enjoyment, had lost their Novelty, and the Largeness of their Salaries, seem'd rather lessen'd than advanc'd, by the extraordinary Gains of the Undertakers; for that is the Scale, in which the hired Actor will always weigh his Performance; but what. ever Reason there may feem to be, in his Case, yet as he is frequently apt to throw a little Self-partiality into the Ballance, that Confideration may a good deal alter the Justness of it. While the Actors, therefore, had this way of thinking, happy was it for the Managen, that their united Interest was so inseparably the same. and that their Skill and Power in Acting, flood in a Rank fo far above the Rest, that if the whole Body of private Men had deserted them, it would yet have been an eafter Matter, for the Managers to have pick'd up Recruits, than for the Deferters to have found proper Officers to head them. Here, then, in this Diftinction lay our Security: Our being Actors ourselves, was an Advantage to our Government, which all former Ma-nagers, which were only idle Gentlemen, wanted: Nor was our Establishment easily to be broken, while our Health, and Limbs enabled us, to be joint-labourers in the Work we were Masters of.

The only Actor, who, in the Opinion of the Publick, seem'd to have had a pretence of being advanc'd to a Share with us, was certainly Booth: But when it is consider'd, how strongly he had oppos'd the Measures, that had made us Managers, by setting himself (as has been observ'd) at the Head of an opposite Interest, he could not as yet have much to complain of: Beside, if the Court had thought him, now, an equal Object of Favour, it could not have been in our Power, to have oppos'd his Preserment: This I mention, not to take from his Merit, but to shew, from what Cause it was not, as yet, better provided for. Therefore it may be no Vanity to say, our having at that Time, no visible Competitors on the Stage, was the only Interest, that rais'd us to be the Managers of it.

But here, let me rest a while, and fince, at my Time of Day, our best Pessessions are but Ease, and

Quiet,

f

e

tl

er

Con

me

Lif

in t

per v

Pro

I an

Some

nty,

and b'n

Un-

ired

hat-

t 25

nto

lter

had

ers,

me,

1.2

of

een

up

per

ion

an

12-

d:

ile

2-

6-

d-

ut

1

p.

11-

in

1 m

r.

Quiet, I must be content, if I will have Sallies of Pleasure, to take up with those only, that are to be found in Imagination. When I look back, therefore, on the Storms of the Stage, we had been ton'd when I confider, that various Vicifitude of Hopes and Fears, we had for twenty Years struggled with, and found our felves, at last thus fafely fet on Shore, to enjoy the Produce of our own Labours; and to have rais'd those Labours by our Skill, and Industry, to a much fairer Profit, than our Task-Masters by all their fevere, and griping Government had ever reap'd from them, a good-natured Reader, that is not offended at the Comparison of great Things, with finall, will allow was a Triumph, in proportion, equal to those, that have attended the most heroick Enterprizes for Liberry! What Transport could the first Brutus feel, upon his Expulsion of the Tarquins, gre er than that which now dane'd in the Heart of poor Actor, who from an injur'd Labourer, unpaid he Hire, had made himfelf, without Guilt, a lee nager of his own Fortune? Let the Grave and Great contemn, or yawn at thefe low Conceits, but let me be happy, in the Enjoyment of them ! To this Hour my Memory runs o'er that pleasing prospect of Life paft, with little less Delight, than when I was first in the real Possession of it. This is the natural Temper of my Mind, which my Acquaintance are frequently Witnesses of, and as this, was all the Ambition Providence had made my obscure Condition capable of I am thankful, that Means were given me to enjoy the Proits of it.

the surface of the su Hor eff Salvers State 18 Vivere bis, with poffe priore fruit hand and one and Something like the Meaning of this, the less learned Reader may find in my Title Page. des our same property all hard former

The second secon

to the state of the state of

CHAP. XIV.

The Stage, in its bigbest Prosperity. The Managers not without Errors. Of what Kind. Cato first acted. What brought it to the Stage. The Company go to Oxford. Their Success, and different Auditors there. Booth made a Sharer. Dogget objects to him. Quits the Stage upon his Admittance. That not his true Reason. What was. Dogget's Theatrical Character.

an

fal

·W

Pr

pri

Im

fett of

tha

fude

cou

ever

Goo

Bufit

equal Deca

Field:

T

tors a gener

the po

TOtwithstanding the managing Actors were, now, in a happier Situation, than their utmost Pretensions could have expected; yet it is not to be suppos'd, but wifer Men might have mended it. As we could not all govern our felves, there were Seafons when we were not all fit to govern others. Our Palfions, and our Interest drew not always the same Way. Self, had a great Sway in our Debates: We had our Partialities; our Prejudices; our Favourites of less Merit; and our Jealoufies of those who came too near us; Frailties, which Societies of higher Confideration, while they are compos'd of Men, will not always be free from. To have been constantly apable of Unanimity, had been a Bleffing too great for our Station: One Mind, among three People, wen to have had three Masters to one Servant; but when that one Servant is called three different Ways, at the fame Time, whose Business is to be done first? For my own Part, I was forced, almost all my Life, to give up my Share of him. And if I could by Art, or Perfuation, hinder others from making, what I thought, wrong Use of their Power, it was the all, and utmost I defired. Yet whatever might be our personal Errors, I shall think I have no Right to speak of them farther, than where the publick Entertainment was affected by them.

fenfible

them. If therefore among fo many, some particular Actors were remarkable in any Part of their private Lives, that might sometimes make the World merry without Doors; I hope my laughing Friends will excuse me, if I do not so far comply, with their Desires, or Curiosity, as to give them a Place, in my History. I can only recommend such Anecdotes to the Amusement of a Noble Person, who (in case I conceal them) does me the flattering Honour to threaten my Work, with a Supplement. 'Tis enough for me, that such Actors had their Merits, to the Publick: Let those recite their Impersections, who are themselves without them: It is my Missortune not to have that Qualification. Let us see, then (whatever was amiss in it) how our Administration went forward.

7

al

W,

84

IP-

we

ns,

ay.

our

Me-

aear

not

t for

WETE

when

the

r my

Per

ght, a

noft I

rther,

ed by

them.

When we were first invested with this Power; the loy of our fo unexpectedly coming into it, kept us for some Time, in Amity, and Good-humour, with one another: And the Pleasure of reforming the many falle Measures, Absurdities, and Abuses that like Weeds had fuck'd up the due Nourishment from the Fruits of the Theatre, gave us, as yet, no leifure, for private Diffentions. Our daily Receipts exceeded our Imagination: And we feldom met, as a Board to lettle our weekly Accounts, without the Satisfaction of Joint Heirs, just in Possession of an unexpected Estate, that had been distantly intail'd upon them. Such a ludden Change of our Condition, it may be imagined, could not but throw out of us a new Spirit, in almost every Play we appear'd in: Nor did we ever fink into that common Negligence, which is apt to follow Good-fortune: Industry, we knew, was the Life of our Bunnefs; that it not only conceal'd Faults, but was of equal Value to greater Talents without it; which the Decadance once of Betterton's Company in Lincoln's- botfields, had lately thewn us a Proof of.

This then was that happy Period, when both Actors and Managers were in their highest Enjoyment of general Content, and Prosperity. Now it was that the politer World too, by their decent Attention, their fensible Taste, and their generous Encouragements to Authors and Actors, once more saw, that the Stage, under a due Regulation, was capable of being what the wisest Age thought it might be, The most rational Scheme, that human Wit could form to dissipate, with Innocence, the Cares of Life; to allure even the Turbulent, or Ill-disposed from worse Meditations, and to give the leisure Hours of Business, and Virtue, an instructive Recreation.

Ī.

n

00 ver

Vill

ere

is

leig ey npl moi

Was

er ti

to ]

mu

ove

and

to th

they

Ton

been

belon

extra

Parts

get's

If this grave Affertion is less recommended, by falling from the Pen of a Comedian; I must appeal for the Truth of it, to the Tragedy of Cato, which was first acted in 1712. I submit to the Judgment of those, who were then the sensible Spectators of it, if the Success, and Merit of that Play, was not an Evidence of every Article of that Value, which I have given to a decent Theatre? But (as I was observing) it could not be expected the Summer-Days, I am speaking of, could be the constant Weather of the Year; we had our clouded Hours, as well as our Sun-shine, and were not always in the fame Good-humour with one another: Fire, Air and Water, could not be more veratiously opposite, than the different Tempers of the three Managers, though they might equally have their useful, as well as their destructive Qualities. How variously these Elements, in our several Dispositions, operated, may be judg'd from the following fingle Instance, as well as from a Thousand others; which, if they were all to be told, might possibly make my Reader wish I had forgot them.

Much about this Time, then, there came over from the Dublin Theatre two uncelebrated Actors, to pick up a few Pence among us, in the Winter, as Wilh had a Year, or two before, done on the other Side the Water, in the Summer. But it was not so clear to Dogget, and my felf, that it was in their Power, to do us the same Service in Drury-Lane, as Wilks might have done them, in Dublin. However Wilks was so much a Man of Honour, that he scorn'd to be outdone in the least Point of it, let the Cost be what it would

ı

1

VS.

.

30

25

of

he

ce

to

ble

of,

nad

ere

no-

ex-

the

neir

OW ons,

In-

1, if

Rea-

from

pick

Villes

e the

r to

r, to night

25 10

tdone

his Fellow-Managers, who had no particular Accounts of Honour open with them. To acquit himelf therefore with a better Grace, Wilks fo order'd it hat his Hibernian Friends were got upon our Stage. before any other Manager had well heard of their Arival. This to generous Dispatch of their Affair, gave Wilks a very good Chance of convincing his Friends. hat himself was sole Master of the Masters of the Company. Here now the different Elements in our Tempers began to work with us. While Wilks was ply animated by a grateful Hospitality to his Friends. Dogget was ruffled into a Storm, and look'd upon his Generofity, as so much Insult, and Injustice upon imfelf, and the Fraternity; during this Diforder, I ood by, a feeming quiet Paffenger, and, fince talking to winds I knew could be to no great Purpose, (whatver Weakness it might be call'd) could not help sming, to observe with what officious Ease, and Delight, Vills was treating his Friends at our Expence, who ere scarce acquainted with them : For it seems, all is was to end in their having a Benefit-play, in the leight of the Season, for the unprofitable Service ey had done us, without our Consent or Defire to ploy them. Upon this Dogget bounc'd, and grew most as untrachable as Wilks himself. Here again. was forc'd to clap my Patience to the Helm, to weaer this difficult Point between them : Applying my f therefore to the Person I imagin'd was most liketo hear me, I defir'd Dogget, " to confider, that I must naturally, be as much hurt, by this vain, and over-bearing Behaviour of Wilks, as he could be: and tho' it was true, these Actors, had no Pretence. to the Favour defign'd them; yet we could not fay they had done us any further Harm, than letting the Town fee the Parts they had been shewn in, had been better done by those, to whom they properly belong'd: Yet as we had greatly profited, by the extraordinary Labour of Wilks, who acted long Parts almost every Day, and at least twice to Dogould, gu's once, and that I granted it might not be fo

The Life of Mr. Colley Cisses, &c.

"much his Confideration of our common Interest, as his Fondness for Applause, that set him to work;

"yet even that Vanity, if he supposed it such, hadits

"Merit to us; and as we had found our Account in it, it would be folly upon a Ponetilio; to tempt the Raffiness of a Man, who was capable to undo all he had done, by any Act of Extravagance, that might fly into his Head: That admitting this Bu e nefit might be some little Loss to us, yet to brest with him upon it, could not but be ten Times of work

"Consequence, than our overlooking his disagreeable Manner of making the Demand upon us.

h

to

m

to

Wa

bu

we

too

upo

fuffi Th:

coul this

Irela

a Co

were the I

not

was l

on hi

filent

his R

ing to

Heart

would

of a t

Tho' I found, this had made Dogget drop the Seve rity of his Features, yet he endeavoured still to feen uneafy by his flarting a new Objection, which was That we could not be fure even of the Charge, they were to pay for it: For Wilks, faid he, you know will go any Lengths, to make it a good Day to them, and may whilper the Door-keepers, to give them the Ready-money taken, and return the Account, in fud Tickets only, as these Actors, have not themselves dis pos'd of. To make this eafy too, I gave him my Words be answerable for the Charge, my self. Upon this head ceded, and accordingly they had the Benefit-plan But so it happen'd (whether as Daged had suspected or not. I cannot fay) the Ready money receiv'd id ten Pounds short of the Sum, they had agreed to my for it. Upon the Saturday following, (the Day of which we conftantly made up our Accounts) I wen early to the Office, and enquir'd, if the ten Pound had yet been paid in; but not hearing that one Shill ling of it had found its way thither, I immediately fupply'd the Sum out of my own Pocket, and direct ed the Treasurer to charge it receiv'd from me, in the deficient Receipt of the Benefit-Day. Here, now, i might be imagin'd, all this filly Matter was accommodated, and that no one could fo properly fay, h was aggrieved, as my felf: But let us observe wha the Consequence says --- Why, the Effect of my in

11 resident distribution distribut pay y of

Wen

und

Shil

ately

ireft

n the

W, I

com-

y, h

what

ny in-

folent interpoling, honesty prov'd to be this: That the Party most oblig'd, was the most offended; and the Offence was imputed to me, who had been ten Pounds out of Pocket, to be able to commit it : For when Wilks found, in the Account, how spitefully the ten Pounds had been paid in, he took me aside, into the adjacent Stone-Passage, and with some Warmth ask'd me, What I meant by pretending to pay in this ten Pounds? and that, for his Part, he did not understand such Treatment. To which I reply'd, That the I was amazed, at his thinking himself illtreated, I would give him a plain, justifiable Answer. -That I had given my Word to Dogget, the Charge of the Benefit should be fully paid, and fince his Friends had neglected it, I found my felf bound to make it good. Upon which he told me, I was mistaken, if I thought, he did not see into the bottom of all this _____ That Dogget, and I, were always endeavouring to thwart and make him uneafy: but he was able to fland upon his own Legs, and we should find he would not be us'd so: That he took this Payment of the ten Pounds, as an Infult upon him and a Slight to his Friends; but rather than fuffer it, he would tear the whole Bufiness to Pieces: That I knew it was in his Power to do it; and if he could not do a civil Thing to a Friend, without all this fenfeless Rout about it, he could be receiv'd in Ireland upon his own Terms, and could as eafily mend a Company there as he had done here: That if he were gone, Dogget and I would not be able to keep the Doors open a Week, and by G-he would not be a Drudge for nothing. As I knew all this was but the Foam of the high Value he had fet upon himself, I thought it not amis, to seem a little filently concern'd, for the helpless Condition, to which his Resentment of the Injury I have related, was going to reduce us: For I knew I had a Friend, in his Heart, that, if I gave him a little Time to cool, would foon bring him to Reason: The sweet Morfel of a thousand Pounds a Year, was not to be met with at every Table, and might tempt a nicer Palate than his own, to swallow it, when he was not out of Humour. This I knew would always be of weight with him, when the best Arguments I could use, would be of none. I therefore gave him no farther Provocation than by gravely telling him, We all had it in our Power to do one another a Mischief; but I believ'd none of us much car'd to hurt ourselves; that if he was not of my Opinion, it would not be in my Power, to hinder whatever new Scheme, he might resolve upon; that London would always have a Play-house, and I should have some Chance in it, tho' it might not be so good as it had been; that he might be fure, if I had thought my paying in the ten Pounds could have been fo ill receiv'd; I should have been glad to have fav'd it. Upon this he feem'd to mutter fomething to himself, and walk'd off, as if he had a Mind to be alone. I took the Occasion and return'd to Dogget, to finish our Accounts. In about fix Minutes Wilks came in to us; not in the best Humour, it may be imagin'd; yet not in so ill a one, but that he took his Share of the ten Pounds, without shewing the least Contempt of it; which, had he been proud enough to have refus'd, or to have paid in himself, I might have thought, he intended to make good his Menaces, and that the Injury I had done him would never have been forgiven; but, it seems we had different Ways of thinking.

O

tl

01

W

ap

net

Ce

the

nev

den

cerr

not

Bett

Fort

In th

Natio

of Manima

Word

the St

Of this Kind, more or less delightful, was the Life I led, with this impatient Man, for full twenty Years. Dogget, as we shall find, could not hold it so long; but as he had more Money than I, he had not Occasion for so much Philosophy. And thus were our Theatrical Affairs frequently disconcerted, by this irascible Commander, this Achilles of our Confederacy; who, I may be hold to say, came very little short of the Spirit Horace gives to that Hero in his Impiger, iracundus, inexorabilis, acer.

This, then, is one of those personal Anecdotes of our Variances,

The Life of Mr. Coller Cibber, &c. 267

Variances, which, as our publick Performances were affected by it, could not with regard to Truth, and Justice, be omitted.

From this Time to the Year 1712, my Memory (from which Repository alone, every Article of what I write is collected) has nothing worth mentioning, 'till the first acting of the Tragedy of Cato. As to the Play itself, it might be enough to say, That the Author and the Actors had their different Hopes of Fame and Prosit, amply answer'd by the Performance; but as its Success was attended with remarkable Consequences, it may not be amiss to trace it, from its several Years Concealment, in the Closet, to the Stage.

e

S.

ıt

i-

le

0,

he

out

es,

In 1703, nine Years before it was acted, I had the Pleasure of reading the first four Acts (which was all of it then written) privately with Sir Richard Steele : It may be needless, to say it was impossible to lay them out of my Hand, 'till I had gone thro' them; or to dwell upon the Delight, his Friendship to the Author receiv'd, upon my being fo warmly pleas'd with them: But my Satisfaction was as highly difappointed, when he told me, Whatever Spirit Mr. 44dison had shewn, in his writing it, he doubted, he would never have Courage enough, to let his Cato stand the Censure of an English Audience; that it had only been the Amusement of his leifure Hours in Italy, and was never intended for the Stage. This Poetical Diffidence Sir Richard himself spoke of with some Concern, and in the Transport of his Imagination, could not help faying, Good God! what a Part would Betterton make of Cato! But this was feven Years before Betterton died, and when Booth (who afterwards made his Fortune by acting it) was in his Theatrical Minority. In the latter End of Queen Anne's Reign, when our National Politicks had changed Hands; the Friends of Mr. Addison, then thought it a proper Time to animate the Publick with the Sentiments of Cato; in a Word, their Importunities were too warm, to be refifted; and it was no fooner finish'd, than hurried to the Stage, in April 1712, at a Time when three Days a Week a Week were usually appointed for the Benefit-Plays of particular Actors: But a Work of that critical Importance, was to make its way, through all private Confiderations; nor could it possibly give place to a Custom, which the Breach of could very little prejadice the Benefits, that on so unavoidable an Occasion, were (in part, tho' not wholly) postpon'd; it was therefore Mondays excepted) acted every Day for a Month, to constantly crowded Houses. As the Author had made us a Present of whatever Profits he might have claim'd from it, we thought our felves oblig'd to spare no Cost, in the proper Decorations of it. Its coming so late in the Season, to the Stage, prov'd of particular Advantage, to the sharing Actors; because the Harvest of our annual Gains was generally over, before the middle of March; many felect Audiences being then usually referv'd, in favour to the Benefit of private Actors; which fixt Engagements naturally abated the Receipts of the Days before and after them: But this unexpected After-crop of Cato, largely supplied to us, those Deficiencies; and was almost equal to two fruitful Seasons, in the same Year; at the Close of which, the three managing Actors found themselves, each a Gainer of thirteen hundred and fifty Pounds: But to return to the first Reception of this Play from the Publick.

Although Cato feems plainly written upon what are called Whig Principles; yet the Tories of that Time had Sense enough not to take it, as the least Reflection, upon their Administration; but on the contrary, they feem'd to brandish, and vaunt their Approbation of every Sentiment in favour of Liberty, which by a publick Act of their Generosity, was carried so high, that one Day, while the Play was acting, they collected fifty Guineas in the Boxes, and made a Present of them to Booth, with this Complimentbonest Opposition to a perpetual Dictator; and his dying fo bravely in the Cause of Liberty: What was infinuated by any Part of these Words, is not my Affair; but so publick a Reward had the Appearance of a laudable Spirit, which only fuch a Play, as Cato, could

0

C

ge

W

be

To

firm

a R

who

Dog

long

With

Rigi

to as

Smil

at fo

of h

there

The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, Sr. 269

have inspired; nor could Booth be blam'd, if upon so particular a Distinction of his Merit, he began himself to set more Value upon it: How sar he might carry it, in making use of the Favour he stood in, with a certain Nobleman, then in Power, at Court, was not difficult to penetrate; and indeed, ought always to have been expected by the managing Actors: For which of them (making the Case every way his own) could with such Advantages, have contented himself, in the humble Station of an hired Actor? But let us see how the Managers stood severally affected, upon this Occasion.

1

d

e

C-

n-

e-

91

ne

ti-

ry,

on 12

gh,

et-

of

bis

ung

nu-

ir;

f a

uld

ave

Dogget, who expected, though he fear'd not, the Attempt of what after happen'd, imagin'd he had thought of an Expedient to prevent it: And to cover his Defign with all the Art of a Statesman, he infinuated to us (for he was a flaunch Whig) that this Prefent of fifty Guineas, was a fort of a Tory Triumph, which they had no Pretence to; and that for his Part, he could not bear, that fo redoubted a Champion for Liberty, as Cato, should be bought off, to the Cause of a contrary Party: He therefore, in the feeming Zeal of his Heart, proposed, that the Managers themselves should make the same Present to Booth, which had been made him from the Boxes the Day before. This, he faid, would recommend the Equality, and liberal Spirit of our Management, to the Town, and might be a Means, to secure Booth more firmly in our Interest; it never having been known, that the Skill of the best Actor had receiv'd so round a Reward, or Gratuity, in one Day, before. who wanted nothing but Abilities to be as cunning as Dogget, was so charm'd with the Proposal, that he long'd, that Moment, to make Booth the Present with his own Hands; and though he knew he had no Right to do it without my Consent, had not Patience to ask it; upon which I turn'd to Dogget, with a cold Smile, and told him, that if Booth could be purchas'd at so cheap a Rate, it would be one of the best Proofs of his Oeconomy, we had ever been beholden to: I therefore defired we might have a little Patience; that our doing it too haftily might be only making fure of an Occasion to throw the fifty Guineas away; for if we should be oblig'd to do better for him, we could never expect, that Booth would think himself bound in Honour, to refund them, This feem'd fo abfurd an Argument to Wilks, that he began with his usual Freedom of Speech, to treat it, as a pitiful Evafion of their intended Generofity: But Dogget, who was not so wide of my Meaning, clapping his Hand upon mine, faid, with an Air of Security, O! don't trouble yourfelf! there must be two Words to that Bargain; let me alone, to manage that Matter. Wilks, upon this dark Discourse, grew uneasy, as if there were some Secret between us, that he was to be left out of. Therefore to avoid the Shock of his Intemperance, I was reduc'd to tell him that it was my Opinion, that Booth would never be made easy, by any Thing we could do for him, till he had a Share in the Profits, and Management; and that as he did not want Friends to affift him, whatever his Merit might be before, every one would think, fince his acting of Cato, he had now enough to back his Pretenfions to it. To which Dogget reply'd, that nobody could think his Merit was flighted, by fo handfome a Present, as fifty Guineas; and that for his further Pretenfions, whatever the License might avail, our Property of House, Scenes, and Cloaths were our own, and not in the Power of the Crown to dispose of. To conclude, my Objections, that the Money would only be thrown away, &c. were overrul'd, and the same Night Booth had the fifty Guineas, which he receiv'd with a Thankfulness, that made Wilks, and Dogget perfectly easy; insomuch that they seem'd, for some Time to triumph in their Conduct, and often endeavour'd to laugh my Jealousy out of Countenance.: But in the following Winter, the Game happen'd to take a different Turn; and then if it had been a laughing Matter, I had as strong an Occasion to smile at their former Security. But before I make an End of this Matter, I cannot pass over the good Fortune of the Company, that follow'd

Aa 3

te

as

W

ra of tu

tee,

06

acc han

the

posi

a m whi

wha foldi

men on. 1

fudde

it wa

Whic.

us to the Act at Oxford, which was held in the intervening Summer: Perhaps too, a short View of the Stage, in that different Situation, may not be unacceptable to the Curious.

After the Restauration of King Charles, before the Cavalier, and Round-head Parties, under their new Denomination of Whig and Tory, began again to be politically troublesome, publick Acts at Oxford (as I find by the Date of feveral Prologues written by Dryden, for Hart on those Occasions) had been more frequently held, than in latter Reigns. Whether the fame Party-Diffentions may have occasion'd the Difcontinuance of them, is a Speculation, not necessary to be enter'd into. But these Academical Jubilees have usually been look'd upon as a Kind of congratulatory Compliment to the Accession of every new Prince, to the Throne, and generally as fuch have attended them. King James, notwithstanding his Religion, had the Honour of it; at which the Players, as usual, assisted. This I have only mentioned, to give the Reader a Theatrical Anecdote of the Liberty. which Tony Leigh the Comedian took with the Character of the well known Obadiah Walker, then Head of University College, who, in that Prince's Reign, had turn'd Roman Catholick: The Circumstance is this.

In the latter End of the Comedy call'd the Committee, Leigh, who acted the Part of Teague, hauling Obadiah, with an Halter about his Neck, whom, according to his written Part, he was to threaten to hang, for no better Reason than his refusing to drink the King's Health, (but here Leigh) to justify his Purpose, with a stronger Provocation, put himself into a more than ordinary Heat, with his Captive Obadiah, which having heightned his Mafter's Curiofity, to know what Obadiah had done to deserve such Usage, Leigh, folding his Arms, with a ridiculous Stare of Aftonishment, reply'd-Upon my Shoule, he has shange his Religion. As the Merit of this Jest lay chiefly in the Auditors sudden Application of it, to the Obadiah of Oxford, it was receiv'd with all the Triumph of Applause, which the Zeal of a different Religion could inspire.

But

our doing it too haftily might be only making fure of an Occasion to throw the fifty Guineas away; for if we should be oblig'd to do better for him, we could never expect, that Booth would think himself bound in Honour, to refund them, This feem'd fo abfurd an Argument to Wilks, that he began with his usual Freedom of Speech, to treat it, as a pitiful Evafion of their intended Generosity: But Dogget, who was not so wide of my Meaning, clapping his Hand upon mine, faid, with an Air of Security, O! don't trouble yourfelf! there must be two Words to that Bargain; let me alone, to manage that Matter. Wilks, upon this dark Discourse, grew uneasy, as if there were some Secret between us, that he was to be left out of. Therefore to avoid the Shock of his Intemperance, I was reduc'd to tell him that it was my Opinion, that Booth would never be made easy, by any Thing we could do for him, till he had a Share in the Profits, and Management; and that as he did not want Friends to affift him, whatever his Merit might be before, every one would think, fince his acting of Cato, he had now enough to back his Pretenfions to it. To which Dogget reply'd, that nobody could think his Merit was slighted, by so hand-Some a Present, as fifty Guineas; and that for his further Pretenfions, whatever the License might avail, our Property of House, Scenes, and Cloaths were our own, and not in the Power of the Crown to dispose of. To conclude, my Objections, that the Money would only be thrown away, &c. were overrul'd, and the same Night Booth had the fifty Guineas, which he receiv'd with a Thankfulness, that made Wilks, and Dogget perfectly easy; insomuch that they feem'd, for some Time to triumph in their Conduct, and often endeavour'd to laugh my Jealousy out of Countenance.: But in the following Winter, the Game happen'd to take a different Turn; and then if it had been a laughing Matter, I had as firing an Occasion to smile at their former Security. But before I make an End of this Matter, I cannot pass over the good Fortune of the Company, that follow'd

a

ra

of

tu

tee

08 acc

the

pof

a n whi

wh:

fold

men

fudd

it w

which

us to the Act at Oxford, which was held in the intervening Summer: Perhaps too, a short View of the Stage, in that different Situation, may not be unacceptable to the Curious.

After the Restauration of King Charles, before the Cavalier, and Round-head Parties, under their new Denomination of Whig and Tory, began again to be politically troublesome, publick Acts at Oxford (as I find by the Date of several Prologues written by Dryden, for Hart on those Occasions) had been more frequently held, than in latter Reigns. Whether the fame Party-Diffentions may have occasion'd the Difcontinuance of them, is a Speculation, not necessary to be enter'd into. But these Academical Jubilees have usually been look'd upon as a Kind of congratulatory Compliment to the Accession of every new Prince, to the Throne, and generally as fuch have attended them. King James, notwithstanding his Religion, had the Honour of it; at which the Players, as usual, assisted. This I have only mentioned, to give the Reader a Theatrical Anecdote of the Liberty. which Tony Leigh the Comedian took with the Character of the well known Obadiah Walker, then Head of University College, who, in that Prince's Reign, had turn'd Roman Catholick: The Circumstance is this.

In the latter End of the Comedy call'd the Committee, Leigh, who acted the Part of Teague, hauling Obadiah, with an Halter about his Neck, whom, according to his written Part, he was to threaten to hang, for no better Reason than his refusing to drink the King's Health, (but here Leigh) to justify his Purpose, with a stronger Provocation, put himself into a more than ordinary Heat, with his Captive Obadiah, which having heightned his Mafter's Curiofity, to know what Obadiah had done to deserve such Usage, Leigh, folding his Arms, with a ridiculous Stare of Aftonishment, reply'd-Upon my Shoule, he has shange his Religion. As the Merit of this Jest lay chiefly in the Auditors sudden Application of it, to the Obadiah of Oxford, it was receiv'd with all the Triumph of Applause, which the Zeal of a different Religion could inspire.

But Leigh was given to understand, that the King was highly displeas'd at it, inasmuch, as it had shewn him. that the University was in a Temper to make a Jest of his Proselyte. But to return to the Conduct of our

u

tl

th

Va

th

of

qu

Co

pla

cli

der

bein

Gai

wha fron

Rela

Plea

to gi

than of ac

and I and b

came nued : fity in over

own Affairs there, in 1712.

It had been a Custom for the Comedians, while at Oxford, to act twice a Day; the first Play ending every Morning, before the College Hours of dining, and the other never to break into the Time of shutting their Gates in the Evening. This extraordinary Labour gave all the hired Actors a Title to double Pay, which, at the Act, in King William's Time, I had myfelf accordingly receiv'd there. But the present Managers considering, that by acting only once a Day, their Spirits might be fresher for every fingle Performance, and that by this Means, they might be able to fill up the Term of their Residence, without the Repetition of their best, and strongest Plays; and as their Theatre was contriv'd to hold a full third more, than the usual Form of it had done, one House well fill'd, might answer the Profits of two but moderately taken up: Being enabled too, by their late Success, at London, to make the Journey pleasant, and profitable, to the rest of their Society, they resolved to continue to them, their double Pay, notwithstanding this new Abatement of half their Labour. This Conduct of the Managers more than answer'd their Intention, which was rather to get nothing themselves, than not let their Fraternity be the better for the Expedition. Thus they laid an Obligation, upon their Company, and were themfelves confiderably, tho' unexpected, Gainers by it, But my chief Reason for bringing the Reader to Oxford, was to shew the different Taste of Plays there, from that which prevail'd at London. A great deal of that false, flashy Wit, and forc'd Humour, which had clude, been the Delight of our Metropolitan Multitude, was only rated there at its bare, intrinsick Value; Apmight Leave, plause was not to be purchas'd there, but by the true for the Sterling, the Sal Atticum of a Genius; unless where Society the Skill of the Actor pass'd it upon them, with some extra-extraordinary Strokes of Nature. Shakespear, and Johnson had, there, a fort of classical Authority; for whose masterly Scenes they seem'd to have as implicit a Reverence, as formerly, for the Ethicks of Ariftotle; and were as incapable of allowing Moderns to be their Competitors, as of changing their academical Habits for gaudy Colours, or Embroidery. Whatever Merit, therefore, some few of our more politely-written Comedies might pretend to, they had not the same Effect upon the Imagination there, nor were receiv'd with that extraordinary Applause, they had met with, from the People of Mode, and Pleasure, in London; whose vain Accomplishments did not dislike themselves, in the Glass, that was held to them: The elegant Follies of higher Life, were not, at Oxford, among their Acquaintance, and confequently might not be fo good Company, to a learned Audience, as Nature, in her plain Dress, and unornamented, in her pursuits and Inclinations, feem'd to be.

The only diffinguish'd Merit, allow'd to any modern Writer, was to the Author of Cato, which Play being the Flower of a Plant, rais'd in that learned Garden, (for there Mr. Addison had his Education) what Favour may we not suppose was due to him. from an Audience of Brethren, who from that local Relation to him, might naturally have a warmer Pleasure, in their Benevolence to his Fame? But not to give more Weight to this imaginary Circumstance, than it may bear, the Fact was, that on our first Day of acting it, our House was, in a Manner, invested; and Entrance demanded by twelve a Clock at Noon, and before one, it was not wide enough for many, who came too late for Places. The fame Crowds continued for three Days together, (an uncommon Curiofity in that Place) and the Death of Cato triumph'd over the Injuries of Casar, every where. To conclude, our Reception at Oxford, whatever our Merit might be, exceeded our Expectation. At our taking Leave, we had the Thanks of the Vice-Chancellor, for the Decency, and Order, observ'd by our whole Society; an Honour which had not always been paid.

e,

of 0, rile

alf

510

to ty

aid

m-

it.

re,

of

was Ap-

rue

rere

tra-

paid, upon the same Occasions; for at the Act, in King William's Time, I remember fome Pranks of a different Nature had been complain'd of. Our Receipts had not only enabled us (as I have observ'd) to double the Pay of every Actor, but to afford out of them, towards the Repair of St. Mary's Church, the Contribution of fifty Pounds: Besides which, each of the three Managers had to his respective Share clear of all Charges, one hundred and fifty more, for his one and twenty Day's Labour; which being added to his thirteen hundred and fifty, shared in the Winter preceding, amounted, in the whole, to fifteen hundred; the greatest Sum ever known to have been mared, in one Year, to that Time: And to the Honour of our Auditors, here, and elsewhere be it spoken, all this was rais'd, without the Aid of those barbarous Entertainments, with which, fome few Years after (upon the Re-establishment of two contending Companies) we were forc'd to difgrace the Stage, to support it.

This, therefore, is that remarkable Period, when the Stage, during my Time upon it, was the leaf reproachable; and it may be worth the publick Observation (if any Thing I have faid of it can be fo) that One Stage may, as I have prov'd it has done, very laudably support it self, by such Spectacles only, a are fit to delight a fenfible People; but the equal Prosperity of Two Stages has always been of a very short Duration. If therefore the Publick should ever recover, into the true Taste of that Time, and flick to it; the Stage must come into it, or starve; as whenever the general Taste is vulgar, the Stage must come down to it, to live -But I ask pardon of the Multitude, who, in all Regulations of the Stage, may expect, to be a little indulg'd, in what they like: If therefore they will have a Maypole, why, the Players must give them a May-pole; but I only speak, in case they should keep an old Custom of changing their Minds; and by their Privilege of being in the wrong, should take a Fancy, by way of Variety, of being in the right Then,

f t B

ne

W

ot

he

CI

wa

Lic

the

in Par

but

POII

cert

Cou Colli

Pret

the 1

Lord to be

Trut

exp

was h

W

Value

near a

which

et inf f his tat a

night

nd the

The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c. 275

in such a Case, what I have said may appear, to have been no intended Defign, against their Liberty of judging for themselves.

1-

en

aft

er-

nat

ery

25 ual

ery

ould

and

we;

age

par-

the 10

May-

ole;

old

Pri-

hen,

III

After our Return, from Oxford, Booth was at full Leifure, to follicit his Admission, to a Share, in the Management; in which he succeeded, about the Beginning of the following Winter; accordingly a new License (recalling all former Licenses) was issued. wherein Booth's Name was added, to those of the other Managers. But still, there was a Disficulty, in his Qualification, to be adjusted; what Consideration he should allow, for an equal Title to our Stock of Cloaths, Scenes, &c. without which, the License was of no more use, than the Stock was without the License; or, at least, if there were any Difference, the former Managers feem'd to have the Advantage in it; the Stock being entirely theirs, and three Parts in four of the License; for Collier, though now but a fifth Manager, still insisted on his former Appointment of 700 !. a Year; which in Equity ought certainly to have been proportionably abated; But Court-Favour was not always measur'd by that Yard; Collier's Matter was foon out of the Question; his Pretensions were too visible, to be contested; but the Affair of Booth was not fo clear a Point: The Lord-Chamberlain, therefore, only recommended it, to be adjusted, among our selves; which to say the Truth, at that Time, was a greater Indulgence than expected. Let us see, then, how this critical Case was handled.

Wilks was of Opinion, that to fet a good round Value upon our Stock, was the only Way, to come tear an Equivalent, for the Diminution of our Shares, which the Admission of Booth must occasion: But Dogett insisted, that he had no Mind to dispose of any Part of his Property, and therefore would set no Price upon at all. Though I allow'd, that both these Opinions night be grounded, on a good deal of Equity, yet I was not sure that either of them was practicable; and therefore told them, that when they could oth agree, which of them could be made so, they might

might rely on my Consent, in any Shape. In the mean Time, I defired they would confider, that as our License subsisted only during Pleasure, we could not pretend, that the Queen might not recal, or alter it: But that to speak out, without mincing the Matter on either Side, the Truth was plainly this: That Booth had a manifest Merit, as an Actor; and as he was not supposed to be a Whig, it was as evident, that a good deal for that Reason, a Secretary of State had taken him into his Protection, which I was afraid the weak Pretence of our invaded Property, would not be able to contend with: That his having fignaliz'd himself, in the Character of Cate (whose Principles the Tories had affected to have taken into their own Possession) was a very popular Pretence of making him free of the Stage, by advancing him to the Profits of it. And, as we had feen that the Stage was frequently treated, as if it was not fuppos'd, to have any Property at all; this Favour intended to Booth was thought a right Occcasion, to avow that Opinion, by disposing of its Property, at Pleafure; But be that, as it might, I own'd, it was not so much my Apprehensions of what the Court might do, that fway'd me, into an Accommodation with Booth, as what the Town, (in whose Favour he now apparently flood) might think ought to be done: That, there might be more Danger in contesting their arbitrary Will, and Pleasure, than in disputing this less terrible Strain of the Prerogative. That if Booth were only impos'd upon us, from his Merit to the Court, we were then in the Condition of other Subjects: Then, indeed, Law, Right and Possession, might have a tolerable Tug for our Property: But as the Town would always look upon his Merit to them, in a stronger Light, and be Judges of it themselves, it would be a weak, and idle Endeavour, in us, not to fail with the Stream, when we might possibly make a Merit of our chearfully admitting him: That though his for-mer Opposition to our Interest, might, between Man and Man, a good deal justify our not making and id not earlier Friend of him; yet that was a Disobligate believe 1100

n

n

h

01

as

he

pre

he

for

par

fore

Tre

fion. Occa

fofte unde

be co

Wilk

not y he we

up, ar nothir Proper

which Actor

By I

oft, in evolv'

tion, out of the Town's Regard, and confequently would be of no weight against so approved an Actor's being prefer'd. But all this, notwithstanding, if they could both agree, in a different Opinion, I would, at the Hazard of any Confequence, be guided by it.

71

1.

n ot

n-

W

2-ot

ht ith

ap-

nat,

rbi-

les

vere

we hen,

tole-

ould

nger be a

h the

it of

for-

Man g an

oliga-

1100

Here now, will be flewn another Inftance of our different Tempers ; Dogget (who in all Matters, that concern'd our common Weal, and Interest, little regarded our Opinion, and even to an Obstinacy, walked by his own) look'd only out of Humour, at what I had faid, and without thinking himself oblig'd to give any Reason for it, declar'd he would maintain his Property. Wilks, (who upon the fame Occasions, was as remarkably ductile. as when his Superiority on the Stage, was in question, he was affuming, and intractable) faid, for his Part, provided our Business of acting was not interrupted. he did not care what we did: But, in short, he was for playing on, come what would of it. This last part of his Declaration I did not dislike, and therefore I defired, we might all enter into an immediate Treaty with Booth, upon the Terms of his Admif-Dogget still fullenly reply'd, that he had no hon. Occasion, to enter into any Treaty. Wilks then, to foften him, propos'd, that, if I liked it, Dogget might undertake it himself. I agreed. No! he would not be concern'd in it. I then offer'd the same Trust to Wilks, if Dogget approv'd of it. Wilks faid, he was not good at making of Bargains, but if I was willing he would rather leave it to me. Dogget, at this, rose up, and faid, we might both do as we pleas'd, but that nothing but the Law, should make him part with his roperty and fo went out of the Room. After which he never came among us more, either as an Actor or Manager.

By his having, in this abrupt Manner, abdicated his oft, in our Government; what he left of it, naturally evolv'd, upon Wilks, and myself. However, this id not so much diffress our Affair, as I have Reason believe Dogget thought it would: For though, by our Indentures tripartite, we could not dispose of his Property, without his Confent: Yet those Indentures could not oblige us to fast, because he had no Appetite; and if the Mill did not grind, we could have no Bread: We therefore determin'd, at any Hazard, to keep our Bufiness still going, and that our safest way would be, to make the best Bargain we could with Booth; one Article of which was to be, That Booth should stand equally answerable with us, to Dogget, for the Consequence, to which Booth made no Objection, and the rest of his Agreement, was to allow us fix hundred Pounds for his Share, in our Property, which was to be paid by fuch Sums as should arise from half his Profits of Acting, 'till the whole was discharg'd: Yet so cautious were we in this Affair, that this Agreement was only Verbal on our Part, tho' written, and fign'd by Booth as what intirely contented him: However, Bond and Judgment, could not have made it more fecure, to him; for he had his Share, and was able to discharge the Incumbrance upon it, by his Income of that Year only. Let us fee what Dogget did in this Affair, after he had left us.

Might it not be imagin'd, that Wilks, and Myfelf, by having made this Matter easy to Booth, should have deserved the Approbation at least, if not the Favour of the Court, that had exerted fo much Power to prefer him? But shall I be believed, when I affirm, that Dogget, who had so strongly oppos'd the Court, in his Admission to a Share, was very near getting the better of us both, upon that Account, and for some Time appeared to have more Favour there, than either of us! Let me tell out my Story, and then think what you please of it.

Dogget, who was equally oblig'd, with us, to act, upon the Stage, as to affift, in the Management of it, tho' he had refus'd to do either, still demanded of us his whole Share of the Profits, without confidering what Part of them Booth might pretend to, from our late Concessions. After many fruitles Endeavours to bring him back, to us; Booth join'd with us, in make ing him an Offer of half a Share, if he had a mind totally

ci

pe

W

de

to

by

of

his

tur

Ch

the

the

mee

may

fom

der'

in t

what use c

way

Days

Chan

get hi

plain'

acting

This .

Dogger

should

that w

dig in

fels, w

totally to quit the Stage, and make it a Sine cure. No! he wanted the Whole, and to fit still himself, while we (if we pleafed) might work for him, or let it alone, and none of us all, neither he, nor we, be the better for it. What we imagin'd encourag'd him to hold us at this short Defiance, was, that he had laid up enough to live upon, without the Stage (for he was one of those close Oeconomists, whom Prodigals call a Miser) and therefore partly from an Inclination, as an invincible Wbig, to fignalize himfelf in defence of his Property, and as much prefuming that our Necessities would oblige us to come to, his own Terms, he was determin'd (even against the Opinion of his Friends) to make no other Peace, with us. But not being able. by this inflexible perseverance, to have his wicked Will of us, he was refolv'd to go to the Fountain-head of his own Diffress, and try, if from thence, he could turn the Current against us. He appeal'd to the Vice-Chamberlain, to whose Direction, the adjusting of all these Theatrical Difficulties, was then committed: But there, I dare fay, the Reader does not expect he should meet with much Favour: However, be that, as it may; for whether any regard was had, to his having fome Thousands, in his Pocket; or that he was consider'd, as a Man, who would, or could make more Noise, in the Matter, than Courtiers might care for: Or what Charms, Spells, or Conjurations he might make use of, is all darkness to me; yet so it was, he one way or other, play'd his Part fo well, that, in a few Days after, we received an Order, from the Vice-Chamberlain, positively commanding us, to pay Dogget his whole Share, notwithstanding, we had complain'd before of his having withdrawn himself from acting on the Stage, and from the Management of it. This I thought was a dainty Distinction, indeed! that Dogget's Defiance of the Commands in favour of Booth; should be rewarded with so ample a Sine cure, and that we, for our Obedience, should be condemned to dig in the Mine, to pay it him! This bitter Pill, I confess, was more than I could down with, and therefore

B b 2

t

1-

d

lf,

ye

of fer

nat

his

ter

ap-

15 ?

you

act,

f it,

f us

ring

our

rs to mak.

mind

foon determin'd, at all Events, never to take it. But, as I had a Man in power to deal with, it was not my Business to speak out to him, or to set forth our Treatment, in its proper Colours. My only Doubt was, Whether I could bring Wilks into the fame Sentiments (for he never car'd to litigate any thing, that did not affect his Figure upon the Stage,) But I had the good Fortune to lay our Condition, in fo precarious and disagreeable a Light to him, if we submitted to this Order, that he fir'd, before I could get thro' half the Consequences of it; and I began now to find it more difficult, to keep him within Bounds, than I had before to alarm him. I then propos'd to him this Expedient: That we should draw up a Remonstrance neither seem. ing to refuse, or comply with this Order; but to flart fuch Objections, and perplexing Difficulties, that should make the whole impracticable: That under fuch Distractions, as this would raise in our Affairs, we could not be answerable to keep open our Doors, which confequently would destroy the Fruit of the Favour lately granted to Booth, as well as of this intended to Dogget himself. To this Remonstrance we receiv'd an Answer in Writing, which varied something, in the Measures, to accommodate Matters with Dogget, This was all I defired, when I found the Style of Sic jubeo was alter'd, when this formidable Power began to parley with us, we knew there could not be much to be fear'd, from it: For I would have remonstrated, 'till I had died, rather than have yielded to the roughest, or smoothest Persuasion, that could intimidate, or deceive us. By this Conduct, we made the Affair, at last, too troublesome for the Ease of a Courties to go thro' with, For when it was confider'd that the principal Point, the Admission of Booth, was got over, Dogget was fairly left to the Law, for Relief.

Upon this Disappointment, Dogget accordingly preferred a Bill in Chancery against us. Wilks, who hated all Business, but that of entertaining the Publick, left the Conduct of our Cause to me; in which we had, at our first setting out, this Advantage

of

of

Ea

to

La

dos abo

Lei

cell

Ace

mal

as u hun

15 cenf

to fi

own

yer's what

urvi

or I

TI

y A

ounc

Occai

he R

low t

n Aé hroug

im b dle A

Aft

ears,

et it

y Day

atlers

t this

of Dogget, that we had three Pockets to Support our Expence, where he had but One. My first Direction to our Solicitor was, to use all possible Delay, that the Law would admit of; a Direction that Lawyers feldom neglect; by this means we hung up our Plaintiff about two Years, in Chancery, 'till we were at full. Leisure to come to a Hearing before the Lord-Chancellor Cooper; which did not happen 'till after the Accession of his late Majesty. The Issue of it was this. Dogget had about fourteen Days allow'd him to make his Election, whether he would return to act,. as usual: But he declaring by his Counsel, That he rather chose to quit the Stage, he was decreed fix: hundred Pounds for his Share, in our Property, with 15 per Cent. Interest, from the Date of the last License: Upon the Receipt of which, both Parties were to fign General Releases, and severally to pay their own Costs. By this Decree, Dogget, when his Lawver's Bill was paid, scarce got one Year's Purchase, of what we had offered him without Law, which (as he survived but seven Years after it) would have been an Annuity of five hundred Pounds, and a Sine cure: for Life.

Tho' there are many Persons living, who know evey Article of these Facts, to be true: Yet it will be found, that the strongest of them, was not the strongest: Occasion of Dogget's quitting the Stage. If therefore he Reader should not have Curiofity enough to know low the Publick came, to be depriv'd of fo valuable n Actor, let him confider, that he is not oblig'd to go brough the rest of this Chapter, which I fairly tell im before-hand, will only be fill'd up with a few dle Anecdotes, leading to that Discovery.

.

d

1-0

n

le l

t.

ic

in

ch

nto

n-

de 2

fi-

th,

10

re. ho

ib-

ch

ge of

After our Law-suit was ended, Dogget, for some few lears, could scarce bear the Sight of Wilks, or myelf; tho' (as shall be shewn) for different Reasons: et it was his Misfortune to meet with us almost evey Day. Button's Coffee House, so celebrated in the atlers, for the Good-Company that came there, was t this Time, in its highest Request. Addison, Steele,

B b 3

j

h,

CC

D

fle

ha

my Iİ

(ho

Co

wer

only whe

gine

fittir

when

exch Han

him

Cour

ask'd

Hefit ing th

Umb!

If the

ream hew (

erious

pliance

Pope, and several other Gentlemen of different Me. rit, then made it their conftant Rendezwous. Nor could Dogget decline the agreeable Conversation there, tho' he was daily fure to find Wilks, or my felf in the fame Place to four his Share of it: For as Wilks, and he were differently proud; the one rejoycing in a capti. ous, over-bearing, valiant Pride; and the other, in a stiff, fullen, Purse-pride, it may be easily conceiv'd. when two fuch Tempers met, how agreeable the Sight of one was to the other. And as Dogget knew, I had been the chief Conductor of our Defence, against his Law-fuit, which had hurt him more for the Loss he had fustain'd, in his Reputation of understanding Bufiness, which he valued himself upon, than his Disappointment had, of getting fo little by it; it was no wonder if I was entirely out of his good Graces, which I confess, I was inclin'd, upon any reasonable Terms, to have recover'd; he being of all my Theatrical Brethren, the Man I had most delighted in : For when he was not in a Fit of Wisdom, or not over-concern's about his Interest, he had a great deal of entertaining Humour: I therefore, notwithstanding his Reserve always left the Door open to our former Intimacy, if he were inclin'd to come into it. I never fail'd to give him my Hat, and Your Servant, where-ever I ma him; neither of which he would ever return, for above a Year after; but I flill perfifted, in my usu Salutation, without observing, whether it was civilly receiv'd, or not. This ridiculous Silence between tw Comedians, that had so lately liv'd in a constant Course of Raillery, with one another, was often fmil'dat by our Acquaintance, who frequented the same Coffee House: And one of them carried his Jest upon it far, that when I was at some Distance from Town he wrote me a formal Account, that Dogget was a tually dead. After the first Surprize, his Letter gan me, was over, I began to confider, that this coming my M from a droll Friend to both of us, might possibly beloes; written, to extract some Merriment out of my real & Story.—lief of it: In this, I was not unwilling to gratif him, and return'd an Answer, as if I had taken the Truth of his News for granted; and was not a little pleas'd, that I had so fair an Opportunity of speaking my Mind freely of Dogget, which I did, in some Fayour of his Character; I excus'd his Faults, and was just to his Merit. His Law-suit with us, I only imputed to his having naturally deceiv'd himself in the Justice of his Cause. What I most complain'd of was, his irreconcileable Diffaffection to me upon it, whom he could not reasonably blame, for standing in my own Defence; that not to endure me, after it, was a Reflection upon his Sense, when all our Acquaintance had been Witnesses of our former Intimacy; which my Behaviour in his Life-time had plainly shewn him, I had a mind to renew. But fince he was now gone (however great a Churl he was to me) I was forry my Correspondent had lost him.

-

nt

ıd

115

he

un-

I

to

re-

hen

n'd ing

rve, , if

met

for

fua

villy

two

oun

d at ffee-

it f

OWD

5 20

gan

y b

1 Be

ratif

him

This Part of my Letter, I was fure, if Dogget's Eyes were still open, would be shewn to him; if not, I had only writ it to no Purpose. But about a Month after. when I came to Town, I had some little Reason to imagine it had the Effect I wish'd from it: For one Day fitting over against him, at the same Coffee-House, where we often mixt at the same Table, tho' we never exchang'd a fingle Syllable, he graciously extended his Hand for a Pinch of my Snuff: As this feem'd from him a Sort of breaking the Ice of his Temper, I took Courage upon it, to break Silence on my Side, and ask'd him how he lik'd it? To which, with a flow Hesitation, naturally assisted by the Action of his taking the Snuff, he reply'd——Umh! the best — Umb! - I have tafted a great While! -

If the Reader, who may possibly think all this extreamly trifling, will consider, that Trifles fometimes hew Characters in as strong a Light, as Facts of more erious Importance, I am in hopes he may allow, that my Matter less needs an Excuse, than the Excuse itself loes; if not, I must stand condemn'd at the End of my Story. But let me go on.

After a few Days of these coy, Lady-like Compliances, on his Side, we grew into a more converfable Temper:

0

far

25

Pri

eve

ften

was

him

myf

Qua

belie

, th

was :

vhic

Reaf

etter

anno

ore

ce fo

er's

linki

et if

1

Temper: At last, I took a proper Occasion, and defired he would be fo frank with me, as to let me know, what was his real Dislike or Motive, that made him throw up so good an Income, as his Share with us annually brought him in? For tho' by our Admission of Booth, it might not probably amount to so much by a Hundred, or two a Year, as formerly; yet the Remainder was too confiderable, to be quarell'd with, and was likely to continue more than the best Actors before us, had ever got, by the Stage. And farther to encourage him to be open, I told him, If I had done any Thing that had particularly disoblig'd him, I was ready, if he could put me in the Way, to make him any amends in my Power; if not, I defired he would be so just to himself, as to let me know the real Truth, without Referve : But Referve he could not, from his natural Temper, easily shake off. All he said came from him, by half Sentences, and Invendoesas No, he had not taken any Thing particularly ill-for his Part, he was very easy as he was; but where others were to dispose of his Property as they pleased-if you had stood it out, as I did, Booth might have paid a better Price for it. You were too much afraid of the Court—but that's all over—There were other Things in the Play-house. --- No Man of Spirit. — In short to be always pester'd, and provok'd by a trifling Wasp-a-vain-shallow !-A Man would sooner beg his Bread, than bear it.-(Here it was easy to understand him: I therefore ask'd him, what he had to bear, that I had not my Share of?) No! it was not the same Thing he said,ake l can play with a Bear, or let him alone, and do what nfide. he would; but I could not let him lay his Paws upeason on me, without being hurt; you did not feel him, as e only I did.——And for a Man to be cutting of Throats, ment upon every Trifle, at my Time of Day! --- If I ber W had been as covetous, as he thought me, may be I oblig' might have born it, as well as you -but I would if he not be a Lord of the Treasury, if such a Temper, as s? B Wilk's, were to be at the Head of it.-I obl Here, re, or DIG THE HO

DESTRUCTION I

The Life of Mr. COLLEY CIBBER, &c. 285

Here, then, the whole Secret was out. The rest of our Conversation was but explaining upon it. In a Word, the painful Behaviour of Wilks had hurt him so forely, that the Affair of Booth was look'd upon, as much a Relief, as a Grievance, in giving him so plausible a Pretence to get rid of us all, with a better Grace.

Booth too, in a little Time, had his Share of the fame Uneafiness, and often complain'd of it to me: Yet as we neither of us could, then, afford to pay Dogget's Price, for our Remedy; all we could do, was to avoid every Occasion, in our Power, of inflaming the Diftemper: So that we both agreed, tho' Wilk's Nature was not to be chang'd, it was a less Evil to live with him, than without him.

t

1

h é

of

'd b's

ire

ou

nat

ap-

25

ats,

fI

e I

uld

ere,

Tho' I had often suspected, from what I had felt myself, that the Temper of Wilks was Dogget's real Quarrel, to the Stage; yet I could never thoroughly elieve it, 'till I had it from his own Mouth. And , then, thought the Concern he had shewn at it was a good deal inconfistent with that Understanding, which was generally allow'd him. When I give my Reasons for it, perhaps the Reader will not have a etter Opinion of my own: Be that, as it may, I annot help wondering, that he, who was so much fore capable of Reflection, than Wilks, should facri. ce so valuable an Income, to his Impatience of anoer's natural Frailty! And tho' my Stoical Way of linking may be no Rule, for a wifer Man's Opinion; t if it should happen to be right, the Reader may ake his Use of it. Why then should we not always nsider, that the Rashness of Abuse is but the false eason of a weak Man? and that offensive Terms e only us'd, to supply the want of Strength in Arment? Which, as to the common Practice of the per World, we do not find, every Man, in Bufiness, pblig'd to refent, with a military Sense of Honour: if he should, would not the Conclusion amount to s? Because another wants Sense, and Manners, I oblig'd to be a Madman? For fuch every Man'is, re, or less, while the Passion of Anger is in Posfession we Va

tha

cor

the

wa

owi

wo

pre

ing

pear Pro

mig

er:

VOR

ll h

came

retur

his C His 1

thers

imes

to the

eaft

fome he p

which

could

the le

Succe

impro

tions (

partici

found

Wrote

Batche and A

Orig

fession of him. And what less can we call that proud Man, who would put another out of the World, only for putting him out of Humour? If Accounts of the Tongue were always to be made up with the Sword, all the wife Men in the World might be brought in Debtors, to Blockheads. And when Honour pretends, to be Witness, Judge, and Executioner, in its own Cause, if Honour were a Man, would it be an Untruth, to fay Honour is a very impudent Fellow? But in Dogget's Case, it may be ask'd, How was he to behave himself? Were passionate Insults, to be born, for Years together? To these Questions, I can only answer with two, or three more, Was he to punish himself, because another was in the wrong? How many fenfible Husbands endure the teizing Tongue of a froward Wife, only because she is the weaker Velfel? And why should not a weak Man have the same Indulgence? Daily Experience will tell us, that the fretful Temper of a Friend, like the Personal Beauty of a fine Lady, by Use, and Cohabitation, may be brought down, to give us neither Pain, nor Pleasure Such, at least, and no more, was the Diffress I found myfelf in, upon the fame Provocations, which I go nerally return'd with humming an Air to myself; a if the Storm grew very high, it might, perhaps, some times ruffle me enough, to fing a little out of Tune Thus too (if I had any ill Nature to gratify) I often faw the unruly Paffion of the Aggressor's Mind punit itself, by a restless Disorder of the Body.

What inclines me, therefore, to think the Conduct of Dogget was as rash, as the Provocations he complain'd of, is that in some Time after he had lest us he plainly discover'd he had repented it. His he quaintance observ'd to us, that he sent many a long Look after his Share, in the still prosperous State of the Stage: But, as his Heart was too high to declar (what he saw too) his shy Inclination to return, he made us no direct Overtures. Nor, indeed, did we care (tho' he was a golden Actor) to pay too deafor him: For as most of his Parts had been pressure.

The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c. 287

well fupply'd, he could not, now, be of his former Value, to us. However to shew the Town, at least, that he had not forfworn the Stage, he, one Day, condescended to play for the Benefit of Mrs. Porter, in the Wanton Wife, at which he knew his late Majesty was to be present. Now (tho' I speak it not of my own Knowledge) yet it was not likely Mrs. Porter would have afk'd that Favour of him, without fome previous Hint, that it would be granted. His coming among us, for that Day only, had a strong Appearance of his laying it in our Way to make him Proposals, or that he hoped the Court, or Town, night intimate to us, their Defire of feeing him oftener: But as he acted only to do a particular Favour, the Managers ow'd him no Compliment for it, beyoud common Civilities. And, as that might not be all he propos'd by it, his farther Views (if he had any) came to nothing. For after this Attempt, he never return'd to the Stage.

1,

n

.

ts

n

30 n

W

of

·

ne he

ity

be

rei

ind

ot

nê-

ne.

ten

il

luct

om-

OS

Ac

ong

lan

he we

ett

Wd

To speak of him, as an Actor: He was the most an Original, and the strictest Observer of Nature, of all his Contemporaries. He borrow'd from none of them: His Manner was his own: He was a Pattern to others, whose greatest Merit was, that they had someimes tolerably imitated him. In dreffing a Character to the greatest Exactness, he was remarkably skilful; the east Article of whatever Habit he wore, seem'd in ome degree to speak and mark the different Humour he presented; a necessary Care in a Comedian, in which many have been too remis, or ignorant. He could be extremely ridiculous, without stepping into the least Impropriety, to make him so. His greatest Success was in Characters of lower Life, which he improv'd, from the Delight he took, in his Observations of that Kind, in the real World. In Songs, and particular Dances too, of Humour, he had no Competitor. Congreve was a great Admirer of him, and found his Account, in the Characters he expresly wrote for him. In those of Fondlewife, in his Old Batchelor; and Ben, in Love for Love, no Author, and Actor could be more oblig'd to their mutual mafterly Performances. He was very acceptable to feve. ral Perfons of high Rank, and Tafte: Tho' he feldom car'd to be the Comedian, but among his more intimate Acquaintance.

And now let me ask the World a Question. When Men have any valuable Qualities, why are the generality of our modern Wits fo fond of exposing their Failings only, which the wifest of Mankind will no ver be wholly free from? Is it of more Use to the Publick, to know their Errors, than their Perfections? Why is the Account of Life to be fo unequally flated? Tho' a Man may be fometimes Debtor to Sense, or Morality, is it not doing him Wrong, not to let the World see, at the same Time, how far he may be Creditor to both? Are Defects and Disproportions, to be the only labour'd Features in a Portrait? But perham fuch Authors may know how to please the World better than I do, and may naturally suppose, that what is delightful to themselves, may not be disagreeable to others. For my own Part, I confess myself a little touch'd in Conscience, at what I have, just now, observ'd to the Disadvantage of my other Brother Manager.

If therefore, in discovering the true Cause of the Publick's losing so valuable an Actor, as Dogget, I have been oblig'd to shew the Temper of Wilks, in its natural Complexion, ought I not, in amends, and balance of his Impersections, to say at the same Time of him, That if he was not the most correct, or judicious, yet (as Hamlet says of the King his Father) Take him for All in All, &c. he was certainly the most diligent, most laborious, and most useful Actor, that I name of the blood has self as three soint the state of the product of the constitute of the first thesis to the to the second and the familiary like shorts and the agency and and a will be promised based no DA have feen upon the Stage, in fifty Years,

MON.

CHAP.

Si

lenc

ferv

WOU

veft

cenf

cati

bett fion

upor

2000 had her

of t

Steel he I

of C terta This

vhic

Dbli

CHAP. XV.

ıti-

ien

ne-

eir

nethe

ns?

d?

or the

re-

be aps

that reefelf

QW, VI2-

the

t, I

, in

and

udi-Take

di-

Sir Richard Steele succeeds Collier, in the Theatre-Royal. Lincoln's-Inn-Fields House rebuilt. The Patent restored. Eight Actors at once desert, from the King's Company. Why. Anew Patent obtain'd by Sir Richard Steele, and assign'd in Shares, to the managing Actors of Drury-Lane. Of modern Pantomimes. The Rise of them. Vanity invincible, and asham'd. The Nonjuror acted. The Author, not forgiven; and rewarded for it.

TPON the Death of the Queen, Plays (as the always had been on the like Occasions) were filenc'd for fix Weeks. But this happening on the first of August, in the long Vacation of the Theatre, the Observance of that Ceremony, which at another Juncture would have fallen like wet Weather upon their Harvest, did them now no particular Damage. Their License however being of course to be renew'd, that Vatation gave the Managers Time to cast about, for the better Alteration of it: And fince they knew the Penion of seven hundred a Year, which had been levied upon them for Collier, must still be paid to somebody, they imagin'd the Merit of a Whig might now have as good a Chance for getting into it, as that of a Tory had for being continued in it? Having no Obligations, herefore, to Collier, who had made the last Penny of them; they applied themselves to Sir Richard steele, who had diftinguish'd himself, by his Zeal for he House of Hanover, and had been expell'd the House of Commons, for carrying it '(as was judg'd at a tertain Crisis) into a Reproach of the Government. This we knew was his Pretention to that Favour, in which he now stood, at Court: We knew too, the Obligations the Stage had to his Writings; there being scarce a Comedian of Merit, in our whole Com. pany, whom his Tatlers had not made better, by his publick Recommendation of them. And many Dayshad our House been particularly fill'd, by the Influence, and Credit of his Pen. Obligations of this Kind from . Gentleman, with whom they all had the Pleafure of a personal Intimacy, the Managers thought could not be more justly return'd, than by shewing him some warm Instance of their Defire, to have him at the Head of them. We therefore beg'd him to use his Interest, for the Renewal of our License, and that he would do us the Honour of getting our Names to fland with his, in the fame Commission. This, we told him, would put it still farther in his Power of supporting the Stage, in that Reputation, to which his Lucubrations had already so much contributed; and that therefore we thought no Man had better Pretentes to partake of its Success.

Though it may be no Addition to the favourable Part of this Gentleman's Character, to fay with what Pleasure he receiv'd this Mark of our Inclination to him, yet my Vanity longs to tell you, that it surpriz'd him into an Acknowledgment, that People, who are shy of Obligations, are cautious of confessing. His Spirits took such a lively Turn upon it, that had we been all his own Sons, no unexpected Act of slial Duty could have more endear'd us to him.

It must be observed, then, that as Collier had no Share, in any Part of our Property, no Difficulties, from that Quarter, could obstruct this Proposal. And the usual Time of our beginning to act for the Winter-Season, now drawing near, we press'd him not to lose any Time in his Sollicitation of this new License Accordingly Sir Richard apply'd himself to the Dukt of Marlborough, the Hero of his Heart, who, upon the first mention of it, obtain'd it of his Majesty, for Sir Richard, and the former Managers, who were Actor Collier we heard no more of.

The Court, and Town, being crowded very early in the Winter Season, upon the critical Turn of Al fairs Actress

£

th

B

ta

ni

th

Ti

plo

ma

and

Qu

Ti

to a

But

had

he

war

Kin (as

plea

" he

6 hi

" ar

far

the y

Playmon

on, ii der'd

for th

Fortu

his lo

marka

in At

Diftur

er ga

heir F

T

fairs, fo much expected from the Hanover Succession, the Theatre had its particular Share of that general Blessing, by a more than ordinary Concourse of Spectators.

of

ot

113

nd

old

nis

nd

n-

ble

hat

to ur-

ole,

ng.

had lial

no

ties,

And Vin-

t to

ense.

)uke

the Sin

tors

arly

Af

fairs

About this Time the Patentee, having very near finish'd his House, in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, began to think of forming a new Company; and in the mean Time, found it necessary to apply for Leave to employ them. By the weak Defence he had always made against the several Attacks upon his Interest, and former Government of the Theatre, it might be a Question, if his House had been ready, in the Queen's Time, whether he would, then, have had the Spirit to ask, or Interest enough to obtain Leave to use it: But in the following Reign, as it did not appear he had done any Thing to forfeit the Right of his Patent, he prevail'd with Mr. Craggs the younger, (afterwards Secretary of State) to lay his Case before the King, which he did in fo effectual a Manner, that (as Mr. Craggs himself told me) his Majesty was pleas'd to fay upon it, " That he remember'd, when "he had been in England before, in King Charles " his Time, there had been two Theatres in London; " and as the Patent feem'd to be a lawful Grant, he faw no Reason, why two Play-houses might not be continued.

The Suspension of the Patent being thus taken off, the younger Multitude seem'd to call aloud for two Play-houses! Many desired another, from the common Notion, that Two would always create Emulation, in the Actors (an Opinion, which I have consider'd in a former Chapter.) Others too, were as eager for them, from the natural Ill-will that follows the Fortunate, or Prosperous, in any Undertaking. Of his low Malevolence we had, now and then, had remarkable Instances; we had been forced to dismiss in Audience of a hundred and sifty Pounds, from a Disturbance spirited up, by obscure People, who never gave any better Reason for it, than that it was heir Fancy to support the idle Complaint of one rival actress against another, in their several Pretensions to the chief Part in a new Tragedy. But as this Tumult feem'd only to be the Wantonness of English Liberty, I shall not presume to lay any farther Censure upon it.

Cc2

ni

pu

en

or

inc

no Ani

H

vhi

eli

ny

Que

ha

Iffai

nat

t fo

the

W

as r ay c hich

r w eleri

e R

, by er co

ent.

nted,

w, as

t fuf

Now, notwithstanding this publick Defire of reestablishing two Houses; and though I have allow'd the former Actors greatly our Superiors; and the Ma. nagers I am speaking of, not to have been without their private Errors. Yet, under all these Disadvantages, it is certain, the Stage, for twenty Years before this Time, had never been in fo flourishing a Condition: And it was as evident to all fensible Spectators, that this Prosperity could be only owing to their better Order, and closer Industry, now daily observ'd; and which had formerly been neglected by our Predecessors. But that I may not impose upon the Reader a Merit, which was not generally allow'd us, I ought honefly to let him know, that about this Time, the publick Papers, particularly Mist's Journal, took upon them very often to censure our Management, with the fame Freedom, and Severity, as if we had been fo many Ministers of State: But so it happen'd, that these unfortunate Reformers of the World, these selfappointed Cenfors hardly ever hit upon what was really wrong, in us; but taking up Facts upon Truft, or Hear-fay, piled up many a pompous Paragraph, that they had ingeniously conceiv'd was sufficient to demolifi our Administration, or at least, to make us very uneasy in it; which, indeed, had so far its Effect, that my equally-injur'd Brethren Wilks, and Booth, often complain'd to me of these disagreeable Aspersions, and propos'd, that some publick Answer might be made to them, which I always oppos'd, by perhaps, too fecun at Y a Contempt of what such Writers could do to hurt us; art of and my Reason for it was, that I knew but of one g Yea way to silence Authors of that Stamp; which was, to see D grow insignificant, and good for nothing, and then we should hear no more of them: But while we continue is true. ed in the Prosperity of pleasing others, and were not conscious of having deserv'd what they said of us, eir lea Good why should we gratify the little Spleen of our Enemies nies, by wincing at it, or give them fresh Opportunities to dine upon any Reply they might make to our publickly taking Notice of them? And though Sience might, in some Cases, be a sign of Guilt, or Error confess'd, our Accusers were so low in their Credit and Sense, that the Content we gave the Publick, almost every Day, from the Stage, ought to be our only Answer to them.

However (as I have observ'd) we made many Blots, which these unskilful Gamesters never hit: But the Fielity of an Historian, cannot be excus'd the Omission of my Truth, which might make for the other Side of the Question. I shall therefore confess a Fact, which, if happy Accident had not intervened had brought our affairs, into a very tottering Condition. This too, is hat Fact, which in a former Chapter, I promis'd to at forth as a Sea-mark of Danger, to suture Managers, their Theatrical Course of Government.

t

ıd

rs, it,

ly ck

m he fo hat

lf.

lly

10

hat

lift

afy

my

om-

to us; one

s, to n we not us,

Ene-

When the new-built Theatre, in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields as ready to be open'd, seven or eight Actors, in one ay deferted from us, to the Service of the Enemy. hich obliged us to postpone many of our best Plays r want of some inferior Part of them, which these eferters had been used to fill: But the Indulgence of e Royal Family, who then frequently honour'd , by their Presence, was pleas'd to accept of whater could be hastily got ready for their Entertainent. And though this critical good Fortune, prented, in some Measure, our Audiences falling so w, as otherwise they might have done, yet it was t sufficient to keep us in our former Prosperity: For at Year, our Profits amounted not to above a third rt of our usual Dividends; though in the follow-Year we entirely recover'd them. The Chief of ese Deserters were Keene, Bullock, Pack, Leigh, Son the famous Toney Leigh, and others of less Note. is true none of them had more than a Negative erit, in being only able to do us more Harm by eir leaving us, without Notice, than they could do Good, by their remaining with as: For though the best of them could not support a Play, the worst of them, by their Absence, could maim it; as the Loss of the least Pin, in a Watch, may obstruct its Motion. But to come to the true Cause of their De. fertion; after my having discover'd the (long unknown) Occasion that drove Dogget from the Stage, before his fettled Inclination to leave it; it will be less incredible, that these Actors, upon the first Opportunity to relieve themselves, should all, in one Day, have left us from the fame Cause of Uneass. ness. For in a little Time after, upon not finding their Expectations answer'd, in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, fome of them, who feem'd to answer for the rest, told me, the greatest Grievance they had, in our Company, was the shocking Temper of Wilks, who, upon every, almost no Occasion, let loose the unlimited Language of Passion upon them, in such a Manner as their Patience was not longer able to support, This, indeed, was what we could not justify! This was a Secret, that might have made a wholesome Paragraph, in a critical News-paper! But as it was our good Fortune, that it came not to the Ears of our Ene mies, the Town was not entertain'd, with their pub lick Remarks upon it.

1

i

n

W

th:

Ad

Ple

tho

WO

tha

to whi

Pro

wift

fon t

of a

fever

of N

preffi

Mino

woul

Acco

he w

found

After this new Theatre had enjoy'd that short Rm of Favour, which is apt to follow Novelty; the Audiences began to flag: But whatever good Opini on we had of our own Merit, we had not so good one of the Multitude, as to depend too much upo the Delicacy of their Tafte: We knew too, that the Company being fo much nearer to the City, than w were, would intercept many an honest Customer, the might not know a good Market, from a bad one and that the thinnest of their Audiences, must be ways taking something from the Measure of our Pr fits. All these Disadvantages, with many others, were forced to lay before Sir Richard Steele, and h ther to remonstrate to him, that as he now flood Collier's Place, his Pension of 700 1. was liable to fame Conditions, that Collier had received it on; which were, that it should be only payable duri our being the only Company permitted to act, but in case another should be set up against us, that then this Pension was to be liquidated into an equal Share with us? and which we now hoped he would be contented with. While we were offering to proceed, Sir Richard stopt us short, by assuring us, that as he came among us, by our own Invitation, he should always think himself oblig'd, to come into any Measures, for our Ease, and Service: That to be a Burthen to our Industry, would be more disagreeable to him, than it could be to us; and as he had always taken a Delight, in his Endeavours for our Prosperity, he should be still ready on our own Terms, to continue them. Every one who knew Sir Richard Steele, in his Prosperity (before the Effects of his Good-nature had brought him to Distresses) knew that this was his manner of dealing with his Friends, in Bufiness; Another Instance of the same Nature will immediately fall in my way.

ts

e-

n-

e,

be

p-

ne

fi-

ng

ds,

old

m-

ho,

nli-

an-

ort. This

ome

OUT

ne-

oub-

Ru

hei

pini

ods

upa

thi

n W

tha

one

e 1

S, W

d for

odi

to t

uri

When we propos'd to put this Agreement, into Writing, he defired us not to hurry ourselves : for that he was advis'd, upon the late Defertion of our Actors, to get our License (which only subsisted during Pleasure) enlarg'd into a more ample, and durable Authority, and which he faid he had Reason to think would be more eafily obtain'd, if we were willing, that a Patent for the fame Purpose might be granted to Him only, for his Life, and three Years after, which he would then affign over to us. This was a Prospect beyond our Hopes; and what we had long with'd for; for tho' I cannot fay, we had ever Reafon to grieve at the personal Severities, or Behaviour, of any one Lord-Chamberlain, in my Time, yet the several Officers, under them, who had not the Hearts of Noblemen, often treated us (to use Shakespear's Expression) with all the Insolence of Office, that narrow Minds are apt to be elated with; but a Patent, we knew, would free us from so abject a State of Dependency. Accordingly, we defired Sir Richard to lose no Time; he was immediately promis'd it: In the Interim, we founded the Inclination of the Actors remaining with with us; who had all Sense enough to know, that the Credit, and Reputation we stood in, with the Town, could not but be a better Security for their Salaries, than the Promise of any other Stage, put into Bonds, could make good to them. In a few Days after, Sir Richard told us, that his Majesty being apprised that others had a joint Power with him, in the License, it was expected we should, under our Hands, fignify, that his Petition for a Patent was preferr'd, by the Confent of us all. Such an Acknowledgment was immediately fign'd, and the Patent thereupon pass'd the Great Seal; for which I remember the Lord. Chancellor Cooper, in Compliment to Sir Richard, would receive no Fee.

0

L

0

W

le

W

W

E

for

TO

ou

pri

por

lia

on cre

Wa

and

him

pro

men

Acc

have

then

in a

publ

diate

ions

Loffe

ind i

Thea

oing

Broth

W

We receiv'd the Patent January 19, 1718, and Sir Richard, being oblig'd the next Morning to fet out for Burrowbridge in York/bire, (where he was foon after elected Member for the new Parliament) we were forc'd that very Night, to draw up in a hurry ('till our Counsel might more advisably perfect it) his Asfignment to us of equal Shares, in the Patent with farther Conditions of Partnership: But here I ought to take shame to myself, and at the same Time to give this fecond Instance of the Equity, and Honour of Sir Richard: For this Assingment (which I had myself the hasty penning of) was so worded, that it gave Sir Richard as equal a Title to our Property, as it had given us to his Authority in the Patent: But Sir Richard, notwithstanding, when he return'd to Town, took no Advantage of the Mistake, and consented in our fecond Agreement, to pay us twelve hundred Pounds, to be equally intitled to our Property, which at his Death we were oblig'd to repay (as we afterwards did) to his Executors; and which, in case any of us had died before him, the Survivors were equally oblig'd to have paid to the Executors of fuch deceased Person, upon the same Account. But Sir Richard's Moderation with us, was rewarded with the Reverse of Collier's Stiffness: Collier by infifting on his Pension, lost three hundred Pounds a Year; and Sir Richard by his accepting a Share in lieu of it, was one Year with another, as much a Gainer.

The Grant of this Patent having affur'd us of a competent Term, to be relied on, we were now emboldened, to lay out larger Sums, in the Decorations of our Plays: Upon the Revival of Dryden's Love for Love, the Habits of that Tragedy amounted to an Expence of near fix hundred Pounds; a Sum unheard of, for many Years before, on the like Occasions. But we thought fuch extraordinary Marks of our Acknowledgment were due to the Favours, which the Publick were now, again pouring in upon us. About this Time we were fo much in Fashion, and follow'd, that our Enemies (who they were, it would not be fair to guess, for we never knew them) made their push of a good round Lye upon us, to terrify those Auditors, from our Support, whom they could not mislead by their private Arts, or publick Invectives. A current Report, that the Walls, and Roof of our House, were liable to fall, had got fuch ground in the Town, that on a fudden, we found our Audiences unufually decreas'd by it: Wills was in mediately for denouncing War, and Vengeance on the Author of this Falshood. and for offering a Reward to whoever could discover him. But it was thought more necessary first to difprove the Falshood, and then to pay what Compliments might be thought adviseable to the Author. Accordingly an Order from the King was obtain'd, to have our Tenement survey'd, by Sir Thomas Hewit, then the proper Officer; whose Report of its being in a fafe and found Condition, and fign'd by him, was publish'd in every News Paper. This had so immeliate an Effect, that our Spectators, whose Apprehenions had lately kept them absent, now made up our offes, by returning to us, with a fresh Inclination, ind in greater Numbers.

1

e

1

h

ıt

e

ir

lf

ir

ad

ir

n,

ed

ed

ch

erase

ere

ich

Ri-

the

on

ar;

ieu

of

When it was first publickly known, that the New Theatre would be open'd against us; I cannot help soing a little back to remember the Concern that my Brother-managers express'd at what might be the Consequences

fequences of it. They imagin'd, that now, all those who wish'd Ill to us, and particularly a great Party, who had been disoblig'd, by our shutting them out from behind our Scenes, even to the Refusal of their Money, would now exert themselves, in any partial, or extravagant Measures, that might either hurt us, or support our Competitors: These too were some of those farther Reasons, which had discourag'd them, from running the hazard of continuing to Sir Richard Steele the fame Penfion which had been paid to Collier. Upon all which I observ'd to them, that for my own Part, I had not the fame Apprehensions; but that I forefaw as many good as bad Confequences from two Houses: That the the Novelty might possibly at first abate a little of our Profits; yet if we flacken'd not our Industry, that Loss would be amply balanc'd, by an equal Increase of our Ease, and Quiet: That those turbulent Spirits which were always molefting us, would now have other Employment: That the question'd Merit of our Acting would now stand in a clearer Light, when others were faintly compared to us; That tho' Faults might be found, with the best Actors, that ever were, yet the egregious Defects, that would appear in others, would now be the effectual Means to make our Superiority shine, if we had any Pretence to it: And that what some People hoped might ruin us, would in the End reduce them to give up the Difpute, and reconcile them to those who could best entertain them.

f

f

n

ta

W

th

an

tu

of

At

Ex

fan Te

Hi

tha

inf

alte

con

Cur

ma

may

In every Article of this Opinion, they afterwards found I had not been deceiv'd; and the Truth of it may be so well remember'd by many living Spectators, that it would be too frivolous and needless to boast, to give it any further Observation.

But, in what I have faid, I would not be understood to be an Advocate, for two Play-houses: For we shall soon find that two Sets of Actors, tolerated in the same Place, have constantly ended in the Corruption of the Theatre; of which the auxiliary Entertainments, that have so barbarously supply'd the Desects of weak Action, have for some Years past, been a flagrant Instance; it may not therefore, be here improper to shew how our childish Pantomimes first came to take so gross a Possession of the Stage.

d

0

to 18, ıſ-

n-

rds

it

13,

to ood

the

ion

s of

eak

I have upon feveral Occasions already observ'd, that when one Company is too hard for another, the lower. in Reputation, has always been forc'd to exhibit fome new-fangled Foppery, to draw the Multitude after them: Of these Expedients, Singing and Dancing had formerly been the most effectual; but, at the Time I am speaking of, our English Musick had been so discountenanc'd since the Taste of Italian Operas prevail'd, that it was to no purpose, to pretend to it. Dancing therefore was, now, the only Weight in the opposite Scale, and as the New Theatre sometimes found their Account in it, it could not be fafe for us. wholly to neglect it. To give even Dancing therefore some Improvement, and to make it something more than Motion without Meaning, the Fable of Mars and Venus, was form'd into a connected prefentation of Dances in Character, wherein the Paffions were so happily express'd, and the whole Story so intelligibly told, by a mute Narration of Gesture only, that even thinking Spectators allow'd it both a pleafing. and a rational Entertainment; tho', at the fame Time. from our Distrust of its Reception, we durst not venture to decorate it, with any extraordinary Expence of Scenes, or Habits; but upon the Success of this Attempt, it was rightly concluded, that if a visible Expence in both, were added to fomething of the fame Nature, it could not fail of drawing the Town proportionably after it. From this original Hint then (but every way unequal to it) fprung forth that Succession of monstrous Medlies, that have so long infested the Stage, and which arose upon one another alternately, at both Houses outvying, in Expence, like contending Bribes on both Sides at an Election, to fecure a Majority of the Multitude. But so it is, Truth may complain, and Merit murmur with what Justice it may, the Few will never be a Match for the Many, unless

300 The Life of Mr. Colley CIBBER, &O

unless Authority should think fit to interpose, and put down these Poetical Drams, these Gin-shops of the Stage, that intoxicate its Auditors, and dishonour their Understanding, with a Levity for which I want a Name.

If I am ask'd (after my condemning these Fooleries myself) how I came to affent, or continue my Share of Expence to them ? I have no better Excuse for my Error, than confessing it. I did it against my Confcience! and had not Virtue enough to starve, by opposing a Multitude, that would have been too hard for me. Now let me ask an odd Question: Had Harry the Fourth of France a better Excuse, for changing his Religion? I was still in my Heart, as much as he could be, on the Side of Truth and Sense, but with this Difference, that I had their leave to guit them, when they could not support me: For what Equivalent could I have found for my falling a Martyr to them? How far the Heroe, or the Comedian, was in the wrong, let the Clergy, and the Criticks decide, · Necessity will be as good a Plea for the one, as the other. But let the Question go which way it will, Henry IV. has been always allow'd a Great Man: And what I want of his Grandeur, you fee by the Inference, Nature has amply supply'd to me, in Vanity; a Pleasure which neither the pertness of Wit, or the gravity of Wisdom, will ever persuade me to part with. And why is there not as much Honesty in owning, as in concealing it? For though to hide it may be Wisdom, to be without it is impossible; and where is the Merit of keeping a Secret, which every Body is let into? To fay we have no Vanity then, is shewing a great deal of it; as to say we have a great deal, cannot be shewing so much. And tho, there may be Art in a Man's accusing himself, even then it will be more pardonable, than Self-commendation. Do we not find, that even good Actions have their Share of it? that it is as inseparable, from our Being, as our Nakedness? And tho' it may be equally decent to cover it, yet the wifest Man can no more be with out it, than the weakest can believe he was born,

a

d

W

CO

the

to

We

diff

W

We

fou

pate

lies chai

Stag

been

the .

in his Cloaths. If then what we say of ourselves be true, and not prejudicial to others, to be called vain upon it, is no more a Reproach, than to be called a brown, or a fair Man. Vanity is of all Complexions; itis the growth of every Clime, and Capacity; Authors of all Ages have had a Tincture of it; and yet you read Horace, Montaign, and Sir William Temple, with Pleasure. Nor am I sure, if it were curable by Precept, that Mankind would be mended by it! Could Vanity be eradicated, from our Nature, I am afraid, that the Reward of most human Virtues, would not be found, in this World! And happy is he, who has no greater Sin to answer for, in the next!

But what is all this to the Theatrical Follies I was talking of? Perhaps not a great deal; but it is to my Purpose; for though I am an Historian, I do not write to the Wise, and Learned only; I hope to have Readers of no more Judgment, than some of my quondam Auditors; and I am afraid they will be as hardly contented, with dry Matters of Fact, as with a plain Play, without Entertainments: This Rhapsody, therefore, has been thrown in, as a Dance between the Acts, to make up for the Dullness of what would have been by itself only proper. But I now come to my Story again.

1-

d

P=

g

ne

th

n, a-

to 725

he

ill,

n:

a-

Vit,

to

efty

ide le ;

nich

nity

ho',

hen

ion.

hare

, 25

cent

ith-

orn

in

Notwithstanding, then, this our Compliance with the vulgar Taste; we generally made use of these Pantomimes, but as Crutches to our weakest Plays: Nor were we so lost to all Sense of what was valuable, as to dishonour our best Authors, in such bad Company: We had still a due Respect to several select Plays, that were able to be their own Support; and in which we found our constant Account, without painting. and patching them up, like Prostitutes, with these Follies in Fashion: If therefore we were not so strictly chaste, in the other part of our Conduct, let the Error of it stand among the silly Consequences of two Stages. Could the Interest of both Companies have been united, in one only Theatre; I had been one of the Few, that would have us'd my utmost Endeavour of never admitting to the Stage any Speciacle, that ought not to have been feen there; the Errors of my own Plays, which I could not fee, excepted. And though probably, the Majority of Speciators would not have been so well pleas'd with a Theatre so regulated; yet Sense, and Reason cannot lose their intrinsick Value, because the giddy, and the ignorant, are blind and deaf, or numerous; and I cannot help saying, it is a Reproach to a sensible People, to let Folly so publickly govern their Pleasures.

Id

h

V

D

on mi

to

on.

mi

bef

the

to c

ced,

non

hor

teen

of h

the !

ter,

ant

COL

toun

dic

Notw

Mane

one p

he the

he N

read,

raph,

Comed

Nonju

confess partial

ormer

While I am making this grave Declaration of what I would have done, had one only Stage been continued; to obtain an easier Belief of my Sincerity, I ought to put my Reader in mind of what I did do, even after two Companies were again establish'd.

About this Time Jacobitism had lately exerted itself, by the most unprovoked Rebellion, that our Histories have handed down to us, fince the Norman Conquest: I therefore thought that to set the Authors, and Principles of that desperate Folly in a fair Light, by allowing the mistaken Consciences of some their best Excuse, and by making the artful Pretenders to Conscience, as ridiculous, as they were ungratefully wicked, was a Subject sit for the honest Satire of Comedy, and what might, if it succeeded, do Honour to the Stage, by shewing the valuable Use of it. And considering what Numbers, at that time, might come to it, as prejudic'd Spectators, it may be allow'd that the Undertaking was no less hazardous, than laudable.

To give Life, therefore, to this Defign, I borrow'd the Tartuffe of Moliere, and turn'd him, into a modern Nonjuror: Upon the Hypocrify of the French Character, I ingrafted a stronger Wickedness, that of an English Popish Priest, lurking under the Doctrine of our own Church, to raise his Fortune, upon the Ruin of a worthy Gentleman, whom his dissembled Sanctity had seduc'd into the treasonable Cause of a Roman Catholick Out-law. How this Design, in the Play, was executed I refer to the Readers of it; it cannot be mended, by any critical Remarks, I can make, in its favour: Let it speak for itself. All the Reason I had to think it no bad Performance, was, that it was acted eighteen Days running, and that the Party, that were hurt by it (as I have been told) have not been the smallest Number of my back Friends ever fince. But happy was it for this Play, that the very Subject was its Protection; a few Smiles of filent Contempt were the utmost Disgrace, that on the first Day of its Appearance it was thought fafe to throw upon it; as the Satire was chiefly employ'd on the Enemies of the Government, they were not so hardy, as to own themselves such, by any higher Disapprobation, or Refentment. But as it was then probable I might write again, they knew it would not be long before they might with more Security give a Loole to their Spleen, and make up Accounts with me. And to do them Justice, in every Play I afterwards produted, they paid me the Ballance, to a Tittle. But to none was I more beholden, than that celebrated Author Mr. Mist, whose Weekly Journal, for about fifeen Years following, scarce ever fail'd of passing some of his Party Compliments upon me: The State, and the Stage, were his frequent Parallels, and the Minifer, and Minbeer Keiber the Manager, were as conlantly droll'd upon: Now, for my own Part, though could never persuade my Wit to have an open Actount with him (for as he had no Effects of his own, did not think myself oblig'd to answer his Bills) Notwithstanding, I will be so charitable to his real Manes, and to the Ashes of his Paper, as to mention one particular Civility, he paid to my Memory, after he thought he had ingeniously kill'd me. Soon after he Nonjuror had receiv'd the Favour of the Town, I ead, in one of his Journals, the following short Pararaph, viz. Yesterday died Mr. Colley Cibber, late omedian of the Theatre-Royal, notorious for writing the Nonjuror. The Compliment, in the latter part, I onfess, I did not dislike, because it came from so impartial a Judge; and it really so happen'd, that the ormer part of it was very near being true; for I had Dd 2

r

.

,

1

0

)-

11

d

36

at

b

10-

ch

of

ne

iin

nc

Ro-

the

can

ke,

i

W

01

J

go

a .

for pu

the

cau fen

mie kno

war

for

tato

atte

o g ts A

have

ikel

lelig

effit

n fpi

W

vera

and

nd h

Bu

at D

re fil

ore f

A

that very Day just crawled out, after having been some Weeks laid up by a Fever: However, I saw no use in being thought to be thoroughly dead, before my Time, and therefore had a mind to fee, whether the Town cared to have me alive again: So the Play of the Orphan being to be acted that Day, I quietly stole myself into the Part of the Chaplain, which I had no been feen in, for many Years before. The Surprim of the Audience at my unexpected Appearance on the very Day, I had been dead in the News, and the Paleness of my Looks, seem'd to make it a Doubt, whether I was not the Ghoft, of my real Self de parted: But when I spoke, their Wonder eas'd itself by an Applause; which convinc'd me, they were then fatisfied, that my Friend Mist had told a Fib of me. Now, if fimply to have shewn myself in broad Life, and about my Bufiness, after he had notoriously to ported me dead, can be call'd a Reply, it was the only one, which his Paper, while alive, ever drew from ma How far I may be vain, then, in supposing that this Play brought me into the Disfavour of so many Win and valiant Auditors, as afterwards appear'd against me, let those who may think it worth their Notice judge. In the mean time, till I can find a better Et cuse for their, sometimes particular, Treatment of me, I cannot eafily give up my Suspicion: And if add a more remarkable Fact, that afterwards confirm's me in it, perhaps it may incline others to join in my Opinion.

On the first Day of the Provok'd Husband, ten Yean after the Nonjuror had appear'd; a powerful Party, not having the Fear of publick Offence, or private Injury before their Eyes, appear'd most impetuously concern'd for the Demolition of it; in which they so far succeeded, that for some Time I gave it up for lost; and to follow their Blows, in the publick Papers of the next Day, it was attack'd, and triumph'd over, as a dead, and damn'd Piece; a swinging Criticism was made upon it, in general invective Terms, for they disclain'd to trouble the World with Particulars; their Seutence, it seems, was Proof enough of its deserving ing the Fate it had met with. But this damn'd Play was notwithstanding, acted twenty-eight Nights together, and left off, at a Receipt of upwards of an hundred and forty Pounds, which happen'd to be more, than in fifty Years before, could be then said, of any one Play whatfoever.

100

22

the

the

bt,

de-

felf

919

b of oad

16-only

me,

this lits,

inf

tice,

t of

if I

my

ean

arty,

In-

con-

loft;

rs of

over,

1 W24

they

theu

ferv-

Now, if fuch notable Behaviour could break out upon so successful a Play (which too, upon the Share Sir John Vanbrugh had in it, I will venture to call it a good one) what shall we impute it to? Why may not I plainly fay, it was not the Play, but Me, who had a Hand in it, they did not like? And for what Reafon? if they were not asham'd of it, why did not they publish it? No! the Reason had publish'd itself, I was the Author of the Nonjuror! But, perhaps, of all Authors, I ought not to make this fort of Complaint, because I have Reason to think, that that particular Offence has made me more honourable Friends than Enemies; the latter of which I am not unwilling should know (however unequal the Merit may be to the Reward) that Part of the Bread I now eat, was given me, for having writ the Nonjuror.

And yet I cannot but lament with many quiet Spectators, the helpless Missfortune, that has so many Years attended the Stage! That no Law has had Force enough to give it absolute Protection! for 'till we can civilize its Auditors, the Authors, that write for it, will seldom have a greater Call to it, than Necessity; and how unikely is the Imagination of the Needy, to inform, or selight the many, in Affluence? or how often does Netessity make many unhappy Gentlemen turn Authors.

n spite of Nature?

What a Bleffing, therefore is it! what an enjoy'd Deverance! after a Wretch has been driven by Fortune, to and so many wanton Buffets of unmanly Fierceness, to and himself at last, quietly listed above the Reach of them. But let not this Resection fall upon my Auditors, withut Distinction; for though Candour, and Benevolence, te filent Virtues, they are as visible, as the most vocitous Ill-nature; and I confess, the Publick has given me ore frequent Reason to be thankful, than to complain.

Dds CHAP

CHAP. XVI.

The Author Steps out of his Way. Pleads his Theatrical Cause in Chancery. Carries it. Plays afted at Hampton-Court. Theatrical Anecdotes in former Reigns. Mini. sters, and Managers always censur'd. The Difficulty of Supplying the Stage, with good Actors, consider'd. Courtiers; and Co. medians govern'd by the same Passions. Examples of both. The Author quits the Stage. Why.

H Aving brought the Government of the Stage through such various Changes, and Revolutions, to this fettled State, in which it continued to almost the Time of my leaving it; it cannot be suppos'd, that a Period of so much Quiet, and so long a Train of Success (though bappy for those, who enjoy'd it can afford fuch Matter of Surprize, or Amusement, as might arise from Times of more Distress, and Disorder. A quiet Time, in History, like a Calm, int Voyage, leave us but in an indolent Station: To talk of our Affairs, when they were no longer ruffled, by Misfortunes, would be a Picture without Shade, a flat Performance, at best. As I might, therefore, throwall that tedious Time of our Tranqui lity, into one Chasm, in my History, and cut my Way short, at once, to my last Exit, from the Stage, I shall at least, fill it up with fuch matter only, as I have a Mind should be known, how few soever may have Patience to read it; Yet, as I despair not of some Readers, who may be most awake, when they think others have most Occafron to sleep; who may be more pleas'd to find me languid, than lively, or in the Wrong than in the right; why should I scruple (when it is so easy a Matter too) to gratify their particular tafte, by vento ring

h

n

b to m n

te

go

Bu

pe

an ch:

ing

tra POS kne The Life of Mr. Colley CIBBER, &c. 307 ring upon any Error, that I like, or the Weakness of my Judgment misleads me to commit? I think too, I have a very good Chance for my Success, in this passive Ambition, by shewing my self in a Light, I have not been feen in-

By your Leave then, Gentlemen! let the Scene open, and, at once, discover your Comedian, at the Bar! There you will find him a Defendant, and pleading his own Theatrical Cause in a Court of Chancery: But as I chuse to have a Chance of pleasing others, as well as of indulging you Gentlemen; I must first beg leave, to open my Case to them; after which, my whole Speech upon that Occasion, shall be at your Mercy.

bis

it.

tri-

ini-

The

rood

Co-

Ex-

1 be

Stage

tions,

mot

pos'd,

Train

'd it

ment,

Dif-

, in a

o talk

d, by a flat

ow all

hafm,

to my

it up

ald be ad it:

nay be

Oca-

nd me

in the

ventu-

In all the Transactions of Life, there cannot be a more painful Circumstance, than a Dispute at Law, with a Man, with whom we have long liv'd, in an agreeable Amity : But when Sir Richard Steele, to get himfelf out of Difficulties, was oblig'd to throw his Affairs into the Hands of Lawyers, and Trustees, that Confideration, then, could be of no Weight: The Friend, or the Gentleman had no more to do in the Matter! Thus while Sir Richard no longer acted, from himself, it may be no Wonder, if a Flaw was found in our Conduct, for the I aw to make Work with. must be observ'd then, that about two or three Years, before this Suit was commenc'd, upon Sir Richard's totally absenting himself, from all Care and Management of the Stage (which by our Articles of Partnership he was equally, and jointly oblig'd with us, to attend) we were reduc'd to let him know, that we could not go on at that Rate; but that if he expected to make the Bufiness a fine Cure, we had as much Reason to expect a Consideration for our extraordinary Care of it; and that during his Absence, we therefore intended to charge our selves at a Salary of 11. 13 s. 4 d. every acting Day (unless he could shew us Cause to the Contrary) for our Management : To which, in his compos'd Manner, he only answer'd; That to be sure, we knew what was fitter to be done than he did; that he had always taken a Delight, in making us easy, and had no Reason to doubt of our doing him Justice. Now whether, under this easy Style of Approbation, he conceal'd any Dislike of our Resolution, I cannot say. But, if I may speak my private Opinion, I really believe. from his natural Negligence of his Affairs, he was glad, at any Rate, to be excus'd an Attendance which he was now grown weary of. But whether I am deceiv'd, or right in my Opinion, the Fact was truly this, that he never once, directly, nor indirectly complain'd, or ob. jected to our being paid the above-mention'd daily Sum, in near three Years together; and yet still continued to ablent himself from us, and our Affairs. notwithstanding, he had seen, and done all this with his Eyes open; his Lawyer thought here was still a fair Field, for a Battle in Cancery, in which though his Client might be beaten, he was fure his Bill must be paid for it: Accordingly, to work with us he went But not to be so long, as the Lawyers were in bringing this Cause to an Issue, I shall at once let you know, that it came to a Hearing before the late Sir Joseph Jekyll, then Master of the Rolls, in the Year 1736. Now as the chief Point, in dispute, was of what Kind, or Importance; the Business of a Manager was, or in what it principally confifted; it could not be suppos'd, that the most learned Council could be so well appris'd of the Nature of it, as one who had himself gone through the Care, and Fatigue of it. I was therefore encourag'd by our Council, to speak to that particular Head my felf; which I confess I was glad he suffer'd me to undertake; but when I tell you, that two of the learned Council against us, came, afterwards, to be successively Lord Chancellors, it fets my Presumption in a Light, that I still tremble to shew it in : But however, not to affume more Merit from its Success, than was really its due, I ought fairly to let you know, that I was not fo hardy, as to deliver my Pleading without Notes in my Hand, of the Heads I intended to enlarge upon; for though I thought I could conquer my Fear, I could not be fo fure of my Memory: But when it came to the critical Moment,

20

de

le

ve

01 ai

hei

and

OW

on-

But,

eve,

lad,

Was

10

t he

ob-

aily

con-

But

his fair

his

ft be

vent,

ging

that kyll,

W as

Im-

at it

t the

the

ough

Cou-

Head

ne to

rned

flive-

ight,

ot to

ly its ot fo

n my

for

not be ritical

ment,

Moment, the Dread, and Apprehension of what I had undertaken, so disconcerted my Courage, that though I had been us'd to talk to above Fifty Thousand different People every Winter, for upwards of Thirty Years together; an involuntary, and unaffected Proof of my Confusion, fell from my Eyes; and, as I found myself quite out of my Element, I seem'd rather gasping for Life, than in a condition to cope with the eminent Orators, against me. But however, I soon sound, from the savourable Attention of my Hearers, that my Dissidence had done me no Disservice: And as the Truth, I was to speak to, needed no Ornament of Words, I deliver'd it, in the plain manner following, viz.

In this Cause, Sir, I humbly conceive, there are but two Points, that admit of any material Dispute. The first is, Whether Sir Richard Steel, is as much oblig'd to do the Duty, and Business of a Manager, as either Wilks, Booth, or Cibber: And the second is, Whether, by Sir Richard's totally withdrawing himself from the Business of a Manager, the Defendants are justifiable, in charging to each of themselves the 11.13 s 4d. per Diem, for their particular Pains, and Care, in carrying on the whole Affairs of the Stage, without any Assistance from Sir Richard

Steel. As to the First, if I don't mistake the Words of the Affignment, there is a Clause in it, that says, All Matters relating to the Government, or Management of the Theatre, shall be concluded by a Majority of Voices. Now I presume, Sir, there is no room left to alledge, that Sir Richard was ever reus'd his Voice, though in above three Years, he never defired, to give it: And I believe there will be as litle room to fay, that he could have a Voice, if he were not a Manager. But, Sir, his being a Manager s fo self-evident, that it seems amazing how he could onceive, that he was to take the Profits, and Adantages of a Manager, without doing the Duty of t. And I will be bold to fay, Sir, that his Affignent of the Patent, to Wilks, Booth, and Cib-

ber

ber, in no one Part of it, by the severest Construction in the World, can be wrested to throw the heavy Burthen of the Management only upon their Shoulders. Nor does it appear, Sir, that either in his Bill, or in his Answer to our Cross Bill, he has offer'd, any Hint, or Glimpse of a Reason, for his withdrawing from the Management, at all; or so much as pretend, from the Time complained of, that he ever took the least part of his Share of it. Now, Sir, however unaccountable this Conduct of Sir Richard may seem, we will still allow, that he had some Cause for it; but whether or no, that Cause, was a reasonable one, your Honour will the better judge, if I may be induly!

in the Liberty of explaining it.

Sir, the Case, in plain Truth and Reality, stands thus: Sir Richard, though no Man alive can write better of Oeconomy than himself, yet perhaps, he is above the Drudgery of practifing it: Sir Richard then, was often in want of Money; and while w were in Friendship with him, we often assisted hi Occasions: But those Compliances had so unfortunat an Effect, that they only heightened his Importunity, to borrow more, and the more we lent, the less he minded us, or shew'd any Concern for our Welfan Upon this, Sir, we stopt our Hands, at once, and peremptorily refus'd to advance another Shilling, 'all by the Balance of our Accounts, it became due to him. And this Treatment (though we hope, not it the least unjustifiable) we have Reason to believe if ruffled his Temper, that he at once, was as short with us, as we had been with him; for from that Day he never more came near us: Nay, Sir, he not only continued to neglect, what he should have done, but actually did what he ought not to have done: He made an Affignment of his Share, without our Confent, a manifest Breach of our Agreement: For, Sir, did not lay that Restriction upon ourselves, for Reason: We knew, before-hand, what Trouble, an Inconvenience it would be, to unravel, and expose of Accounts to Strangers, who if they were to do us hurt, by divulging our Secrets, we were fure con

1

a

a

s, tic

1 ick

ou

h

Si

00tl

gen

tion

Bur-

ers,

his

t, or

the

from

leaft

mac-

, we

but

one,

ulg'd

tands

Write

s, he

bard,

e w

d hi

unat

unity,

ess he

elfare.

, and

g, 'dl

ue to not i

ieve 6

t with

Day

t only

e, bu

e mad

ent,

ir, W

for I

le, an

ofe of

o us n

ous no good, by keeping them. If Sir Richard ad had our common Interest at heart, he would have cen as warm in it, as we were, and as tender of urting it: But supposing his assigning his Share to thers, may have done us no great Injury, it is at least, firewd Proof, that he did not care whether it did s any or no. And if the Clause was not strong nough, to restrain him from it, in Law, there as enough in it, to have restrain'd him, in Honour, om breaking it. But take it, in its best Light, it news him as remiss a Manager, in our Affairs, as he aturally was in his own. Suppose, Sir, we had all een as careless as himself, which I can't find he has ny more Right to be, than we have, must not our hole Affair have fallen to Ruin? And may we not, y a parity of Reason suppose, that by his Neglect fourth Part of it does fall to Ruin ? But, Sir, there a particular Reason to believe, that, from our want-Sir Richard, more, than a fourth Part does suffer y it: His Rank and Figure, in the World, while gave us the Assistance of them, were of extraornary Service to us: He had an easier access, and more regarded Audience at Court, than our low ation of Life could pretend to, when our Interest anted (as it often did) a particular Solicitation there. at fince we have been depriv'd of him, the very nd, the very Confideration of his Share in our Pros, is not perform'd on his Part. And will Sir Riard, then, make us no Compensation, for so valuae a Loss, in our Interests, and so palpable an Adtion to our Labour? I am afraid, Sir, if we were to be as indolent, in the Managing part, as Sir. ichard presumes he has a Right to be; our Patent ould foon run us, as many Hundreds, in Debt, as has had (and still feems willing to have) his Share , for doing of nothing.

Sir, our next Point, in question, is Whether Wilks, ontb, and Cibber, are justifiable, in charging the l. 13 s. 4d. per Diem, for their extraordinary Magement, in the absence of Sir Richard Seeel. I ubt, Sir, it will be hard to come to the Solution of this Point, unless we may be a little indulg'd, in fetting forth, what is the daily, and necessary Business, and Duty of a Manager. But, Sir, we will endeavour to be as short, as the Circumstances will admit of.

of

Sir, by our Books, it is apparent, that the Mana. gers have under their Care, no less than One Hundred, and Forty Persons, in constant, daily Pay: And among fuch Numbers, it will be no wonder, if a great many of them are unskilful, idle, and some. times untractable; all which Tempers are to be led, or driven, watch'd, and restrain'd by the continual skill, care, and patience of the Managers. Every Manager is oblig'd, in his turn, to attend two or three Hours every Morning, at the Rehearfal of Plays, and other Entertainments for the Stage, or elfe every Rehearfal would be but a rude meeting of Mirth and Jollity. The same Attendance, is as necessary at every Play, during the time of its publick Action, in which one, or more of us, have constantly been punctual, whether we have had any part, in the Play, then acted or not. A Manager ought to be at the Reading of every new Play, when it is first offer'd to the Stage, tho' there are seldom one of those Plays in twenty, which upon hearing, proves to be fit for it, and upon such Occasions the Attendance must be allow'd, to be as painfully tedious, as the getting rid of the Authors of fuch Plays, must be disagreeable and difficult. Besides this, Sir, a Manager, is to order all new Cloaths, to affift in the Fancy, and Propriety of them, to limit the Expence, and to withftand the unreasonable Importunities of some, that are apt to think themselves injur'd, if they are not finer than their Fellows: A Manager is to direct and overfee the Painters, Machinists, Musicians, Singer, and Dancers; to have an Eye upon the Door-keepen, Under Servants, and Officers, that without such Care, are too often apt to defraud us, or neglect their Duty And all this, Sir, and more, much more, which we hope will be needless to trouble you with, have we done ever Day,

1

h

b

in

S

he

ha

CO

tag

fits

Sir

in t

con

fus'

and

grea

n t

Day, without the least Affistance from Sir Richard, even at times when the Concern, and Labour of our Parts, upon the Stage, have made it very difficult, and irksome to go thro' with it.

In this Place, Sir, it may be worth observing, that Sir Richard, in his Answer to our Cross Bill, seems to value himself, upon Cibber's confessing, in the Dedication of a Play, which he made to Sir Richard. that he (Sir Richard) had done the Stage very confiderable Service, by leading the Town to our Plays, and filling our Houses, by the Force and Influence of his Tatlers. But Sir Richard forgets, that those Tatlers were written in the late Queen's Reign, long before he was admitted to a Share in the Playhouse: And in truth, Sir, it was our real Sense of those Obligations and Sir Richard's affuring us they should be continued, that first and chiefly inclin'd us to invite him to share the Profits of our Labours, upon such farther Conditions, as in his Affignment of the Patent to us, are specified. And, Sir, as Cibber's publick Acknowledgment of those Favours is at the same Time an equal Proof of Sir Richard's Power to continue them; fo Sir, we hope, it carries an equal Probability, that without his Promise to use that Power, he would never have been thought on, much less have been invited by us, into a Joint Management of the Stage, and into a Share of the Profits: And indeed what Pretence could he have form'd, for asking a Patent from the Crown, had he been posses'd of no eminent Qualities, but in common with other Men? But, Sir, all these Advantages, all these Hopes, nay Certainties of greater Prohts, from those great Qualities, have we been utterly depriv'd of by the wilful, and unexpected Neglect of Sir Richard. But we find, Sir, it is a common thing. in the Practice of Mankind, to justify one Error, by committing another: For Sir Richard has not only relus'd us the extraordinary Affistance, which he is able, and bound to give us; but on the contrary, to our great Expence, and loss of Time, now calls us to account, in this Honourable Court, for the Worng we have Ee

e ever Day

, in

Bufi-

will

will ana-

-nu F

Pay:

r, if

ome-

led,

inual

very

10 01

Plays,

every

h and

every

which

ctual,

then

ading

o the

ys in

for it,

be al-

rid of

eable is to

, and

nd to e, that

re not ect and

inger,

eeper, Care,

Duty.

ve hope

done him, in not doing his Bufiness of a Manager, for nothing. But, Sir, Sir Richard has not met with fuch Treatment from us: He has not writ Plays for us, for Nothing, we paid him very well, and in an extraordinary Manner, for his late Comedy of the Conscious Lovers: And though, in writing that Play, he had more Affiltance from one of the Managers, than becomes me to enlarge upon, of which Evidence has been given upon Oath, by feveral of our Actors; yet. Sir, he was allow'd the full, and particular Profits of that Play, as an Author, which amounted to Three Hundred Pounds, befides about Three Hundred more. which he receiv'd as a Joint-Sharer, of the general Profits, that arose from it. Now, Sir, though the Managers are not all of them able to write Plays, yet they have all of them been able to do (I won't fay, as good, but at least) as profitable a thing. They have invented, and adorn'd a Spectacle, that for forty Days together has brought more Money, to the House, than the best Play that ever was writ. The Spectacle, I mean, Sir, is that of the Coronation-Ceremony of Anna-Bullen: And though we allow a good Play to be the more laudable Performance, yet, Sir, in the profitable Part of it, there is no Comparison. If therefore our Spectacle brought in as much, or more Money, than Sir Richard's Comedy, what is there, on his fide but Usage, that intitles him, to be paid for one, more than we are, for t'other? But then, Sir, if he is so profitably distinguish'd for his Play, if we yield him up the Preference, and pay him for his extraordinary Composition, and take nothing for our own, tho' it turn'd out more to our common Profit; fure, Sir, while we do fuch extraordinary Duty, as Managers, and while he neglects his Share of that Duty, he cannot grudge us the moderate Demand we make for our separate Labour?

To conclude, Sir, if by our constant Attendance, our Care, our Anxiety (not to mention the disagreeable Contests, we sometimes meet with, toth within, and without Doors, in the Management of our Theatre) we have not only sav'd the whole from Ruin,

which,

The Life of Mr. Colley Cibber, &c. 315

which, if we had all follow'd Sir Richard's Example, could not have been avoided; I say, Sir, if we have still made it so valuable an Income to him, without his giving us the least Assistance for several Years past; we hope, Sir, that the poor Labourers, that have done all this for Sir Richard, will not be thought unworthy of their Hire.

How far our Affairs, being set in this particular Light, might affist our Cause, may be of no great Importance to guess; but the Issue of it was this: That Sir Richard not having made any Objection, to what we had charg'd for Management, for three Years together; and as our Proceedings had been all transacted, in open Day, without any clandestine Intention of Fraud; we were allow'd the Sums, in dispute, abovemention'd; and Sir Richard not being advis'd, to appeal to the Lord Chancellor, both Parties paid their own Costs, and thought it their mutual Interest, to let this be the last of their Law-suits.

And now, gentle Reader, I ask Pardon for so long. an Imposition on your Patience: For though I may have no ill Opinion of this Matter myself; yet to you, I can very eafily conceive it may have been tedious. You are therefore, at your own Liberty of charging the whole Impertinence of it, either to the Weakness of my Judgment, or the Strength of my Vanity; and I will so far join in your Censure, that I farther confess, I have been so impatient to give it you, that you have had it, out of its turn: For some Years before this Suit was commenced, there were other Facts, that ought to have had a Precedence in my History: But that, I dare fay, is an Overfight you will eafily excuse, provided you afterwards find them worth reading. However, as to that Point, I must take my chance, and shall therefore proceed to speak of the Theatre, which was order'd by his late Majesty to be erected in the great old Hall at Hampton-Court; where Plays were intended to have been acted twice a Week, during the Summer-Season. But before the Theatre could be finish'd, above half the Month of September being elaps'd. Ee 2

1

h

b

C

at

r te

Pe

hi

tio

fpe

for

no

any abo

Lac

bole

Fifb

amo

mig

and.

know

confi

and .

crim

ty to

ter er

mory

may :

Eyes,

V

laps'd, there were but feven Plays acted before the Court return'd to London. This throwing open a Theatre, in a Royal Palace, feem'd to be reviving the Old English hospitable Grandeur, where the lowest Rank of neighbouring Subjects might make themselves merry at Court without being laughed at themselves. In former Reigns, Theatrical Entertainments at the Royal Palaces had been perform'd at vast Expence, as appears by the Description of the Decorations, in feveral of Ben. Johnson's Masques, in King Jamu and Charles the First's time; many curious, and original Draughts of which, by Sir Inigo Jones, I have feen in the Musaum of our greatest Master, and Patron of Arts, and Architecture, whom it would be a need. less Liberty to name. But when our civil Wars ended in the Decadence of Monarchy, it was then an Honour to the Stage, to have fallen with it: Yet, after the Restoration of Charles II. some faint Attempt were made to revive these Theatrical Spectacles at Court; but I have met with no Account of above one Masque acted there, by the Nobility; which was that of Califo, written by Crown, the Author of Sir Courtly-Nice. For what Reason Croque was chosen to that Honour, rather than Dryden, who was then Poet-Laureat, and out of all comparison his Superior, in Poetry, may feem surprizing: But if we confide the Offence which the then Duke of Buckingham took at the Character of Zimri, in Dryden's Absalom, &t. I which might probably be a Return to his Grace's Drawcanfir, in the Rehearfal) we may suppose the Prejudice and Recommendation of so illustrious a Pretender to Poetry, might prevail at Court, to give Crown this Preference. In the same Reign, the King had his Comedians at Windsor, but upon a particular Establishment; for tho' they acted in St. George's Hall, within the Royal Palace yet (as I have been inform'd by an Eye-witness) they were permitted to take Money at the Door, of every Spectator; whether this was an Indulgence, in Confcience, I cannot fay, but it was a common Report among the principal Actors, when I first came into the Theatre-Royal in 1690, that there was then, due to the Company from that Court, about One Thoufand Five Hundred Pounds for Plays commanded, &c. and yet it was the general Complaint, in that Prince's Reign, that he paid too much Ready-money, for his Pleasures: But these Affertions I only give, as I receiv'd them, without being answerable for their Reali-This Theatrical Anecdote, however, puts me in mind of one of a more private Nature, which I had from old folemn Boman, the late Actor of venerable Memory. Boman, then a Youth, and fam'd for his Voice, was appointed to fing fome Part in a Concert of Musick at the private Lodgings of Mrs. Gavin; at which were only present, the King, the Duke of York, and one or two more, who were usually admitted upon those detached Parties of Pleasure. When the Performance was ended, the King express'd himself highly pleas'd, and gave it extraordinary Commendations: Then, Sir, faid the Lady, to shew you don't fpeak like a Courtier, I hope you will make the Performers a handfom Present: The King said, he had no Money about him, and ask'd the Duke if he had any? To which the Duke reply'd, I believe, Sir, not above a Guinea or two. Upon which the laughing Lady, turning to the People about her, and making bold with the King's common Expression, cry'd Od's Fish! What Company am I got into!

ne

en

en

07, 13

ok

.33

e's

the

re-

ive

the

ar-

St.

s 1

rsq

pec-

on-

port into

the

Whether the reverend Hiltorian of his Own Time, among the many other Reasons of the same Kind, he might have for stiling this Fair One the indiscreetest, and wildest Creature, that ever was in a Court, might know this to be one of them, I can't say: But if we consider her, in all the Disadvantages of her Rank, and Education, she does not appear to have had any criminal Errors more remarkable, than her Sex's Frailty to answer for: And, if the same Author in his latter end of that Prince's Life, seems to reproach his Memory, with too kind a Concern for her support, we may allow, that it becomes a Bishop to have had no Eyes, or Taste for the frivolous Charms or playful Ra-

Ee 3

dinage

a

ty

W

he

di

ga

102

tur

wh

mi

ferv

it i

" mer ill Life. To all this let us give an implicit Credit : Here is the Account of a frail Sinner made up, with a Reverend Witness! Yet I cannot, but lament that this Mitred Historian, who seems to know more personal & crets, than any that ever writ before him, should not have been as inquisitive after the last Hours of our other fair Offender, whose Repentance I have been unquestionably inform'd, appear'd in all the contrit Symptoms of a Christian Sincerity. If therefore you find I am fo much concern'd to make this favourable mention of the one, because she was a Sister of the Theatre, why may not __ But I dare not be so presump tuous, so uncharitably bold, as to suppose the other was spoken better of, merely because she was the Daughter of a Clergyman. Well, and what then? What's all this idle Frate, you may fay, to the matter in hand? Why

I say your Question is a little too critical; and if you won't give an Author leave, now and then, to embellish his Work by a natural Reflection, you are an ungentle Reader. But I have done with my Digression, and return to our Theatre at Hampton-Court, where I am not sure the Reader, be he ever so wise, will meet with any thing more worth his Notice: However, if he happens to read as I write for want of something better to do, he will go on; and perhaps, wonder when I tell him, that ot

1

m-

100

ble

np-

Was

this

Thy

127

A Play presented at Court, or acted on a publick Stage, feems to their different Auditors, a different Entertainment. Now hear my Reason for it. In the comman Theatre, the Guests are at home, where the politer Forms of Good-breeding are not so nicely regarded: Every one there, falls to, and likes or finds Fault, according to his natural Tafte, or Appetite. At Court, where the Prince gives the Treat, and honours the Table with his own Presence, the Audience is under the Restraint of a Circle, where Laughter, or Applause, rais'd higher than a Whisper, would be star'd At a publick Play they are both let loofe, even till the Actor is, sometimes, pleas'd with his not being able to be heard, for the Clamour of them. But this Coldness or Decency of Attention, at Court, I observed had but a melancholy Effect, upon the impatient Vanity of some of our Actors, who seem'd inconsolable, when their flashy Endeavours to please had pass'd unheeded: Their not confidering where they were, quite disconcerted them; nor could they recover their Spirits, 'till from the lowest Rank of the Audience, fome gaping John, or Joan, in the fullness of their Hearts, roar'd out their Approbation: And indeed, such a natural Instance of honest Simplicity, a Prince himself, whose Indulgence knows where to make Allowances, might reasonably smile at, and perhaps not think it the worst part of his Entertainment. Yet it must be own'd, that an Audience may be as well too much referv'd, as too profuse of their Applause: For though, it is possible a Betterton would not have been discourag'd, from throwing out an Excellence, or elated into an Error, by his Auditors being too little, or too much pleas'd, yet as Actors of his Judgment are Rarities; those of less Judgment may fink into a Flatness in their Performance, for want of that Applause, which from the generality of Judges, they might perhaps, have fome Pretence to: And the Auditor, when not feeming to feel what ought to affect him, may rob himself of fomething more, that he might have had, by giving the Actor his due, who measures out his Power to please, according to the Value he sets upon his Hearer's Tafte, or Capacity. But however, as we were not, here, itinerant Adventurers, and had properly but one Royal Auditor to please; after that Honour was attain'd to, the rest of our Ambition had little to look after: And that the King was often pleas'd, we were not only affur'd, by those who had the Honour to be near him; but could fee it, from the frequent Satisfaction in his Looks at particular Scenes, and Passages; One Instance of which, I am tempted to relate, because it was at a Speech, that might more naturally affect a Sovereign Prince, than any private Spectator. Shakespear's Harry the Eighth; that King commands the Cardinal to write circular Letters of Indemnity, into every County, where the Payment of certain heavy Taxes had been disputed: Upon which the Cardinal whispers the following Directions to his Secretary Gromwell:

t

t

b

it

of

th

tic

at fut

Ita

W

yet

the was

Cir

Wei

extr

nag

Let there be Letters writ to every Shire, Of the King's Grace, and Pardon: The griev'd Commons Hardly conceive of me. Let it be nois'd, That through our Intercession, this Revokement, And Pardon comes.——I shall anon advise you Farther, in the Proceeding—

The Solicitude of this Spiritual Minister, in filching from his Master the Grace, and Merit of a good Action, and dressing up himself in it, while himself had been Author of the Evil complain'd of, was so easy a Stroke of his Temporal Conscience, that it seem'd to raise the King into fomething more than a Smile, whenever that Play came before him: And I had a more distinct Occasion, to observe this Effect; because my proper Stand on the Stage, when I spoke the Lines, required me to be near the Box, where the King usually sate. In a Word, this Play is so true a Dramatick Chronicle of an old English Court, and where the Character of Harry the Eight is so exactly drawn, even to a humourous Likeness, that it may be no wonder why his Majesty's particular Taste for it, should have commanded it three several times in one Winter.

This too calls to my Memory an extravagant Pleafantry of Sir Richard Steel, who being ask'd by a grave Nobleman, after the fame Play had been prefented at Hampton-Court, how the King lik'd it; reply'd, So terribly well, my Lord, that I was afraid I should have lost all my Attors! For I was not sure, the King would not keep them to fill the Posts at Court, that he faw them so fit for in the Play.

It may be imagin'd, that giving Plays to the People at such a distance from London, could not but be attended with an extraordinary Expence; and it was some Difficulty, when they were first talk'd of to bring them under a moderate Sum; I shall therefore, in as sew Words, as possible, give a particular of what Establishment they were then brought to, that in case the same Entertainments, should at any time hereafter be call'd to the same Place, suture Courts may judge, how far the Precedent may stand good, or need an Alteration.

Though the stated Fee, for a Play acted, at Whitehall had been formerly, but Twenty Pounds; yet, as that hinder'd not the Company's acting on the same Day, at the publick Theatre, that Sum was almost all clear Profits to them: But this Circumstance not being practicable, when they were commanded to Hampton-Court, a new, and extraordinary Charge was unavoidable: The Managers, therefore, not to inslame it, defined no

he

Con-

Confideration, for their own Labour, farther than the Honour of being employ'd, in his Majesty's Com. mands; and, if the other Actors might be allow'd. each their Day's Pay, and travelling Charges, they should hold themselves ready, to act any Play, there, at a Day's Warning: And that the Trouble might be less, by being divided, the Lord-Chamberlain was pleas'd to let us know, that the Houshold-Mu. fick, the Wax Lights, and a Chaife Marine, to carry our moving Wardrobe to every different Play, should be under the Charge of the proper Officers. Notwithstanding these Assistances, the Expence of every play amounted to Fifty Pounds: Which Account, when all was over, was not only allow'd us, but his Majesty was graciously pleas'd to give the Managers Two Hundred Pounds more, for their particular Performance, and Trouble, in only feven times acting. Which last Sum, tho' it might not be too much, for a Sovereign Prince to give, it was certainly more than our utmost Merit ought to have hop'd for : And I confess, when I receiv'd the Order for the Money, from his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, then Lord-Chamberlain, I was fo furpris'd, that I imagin'd his Grace's Favour, or Recommendation of our Readiness, or Diligence, must have contributed to so high a Confideration of it, and was offering my Acknowledgments, as I thought them due: but was foon stopt short, by his Grace's Declaration, That we had no Obligations for it, but to the King himself, who had given it, from no other Motive, than his own Bounty. Now whether we may suppose that Cardinal Wolsey (as you see Shakespear has drawn him) would filently have taken such low Acknowledgments to himself, perhaps may be as little worth confideration, as my mentioning this Circumstance has been necessary: But if it is due to the Honour and Integrity of the (then) Lord-Chamberlain, I cannot think it wholly impertinent.

Since that time, there has been but one Play given at Hampton-Court, which was for the Entertainment of the Duke of Lorrain; and for which

18

be

th

a

ex

do

A

go

of

w

ma

rit.

Bra

pro

Ye,

of.

his present Majesty was pleas'd to order us a Hundred Pounds.

The Reader may, now plainly fee, that I am ranfacking my Memory, for such remaining scraps of Theatrical History, as may not, perhaps, be worth his Notice: But if they are such as tempt me to write them, why may I not hope, that in this wide World, there may be many an idle Soul, no wifer than myself, who may be equally tempted to read them?

I have so often had occasion to compare the State of the Stage to the State of a Nation, that I yet feel a Reluctancy to drop the Comparison, or speak of the one, without some Application to the other. How many Reigns, then, do I remember, from that of Charles the Second, through all which, there has been, from one half of the People, or the other, a fuccession of Clamour, against every different Ministry for the Time being? And yet, let the Cause of this Clamour have been never so well grounded, it is impossible, but that some of those Ministers must have been wifer, and honester Men, than others: If this be true, as true, I believe it is, why may I not then fay, as some Fool in a French Play does, upon a like Occasion ___ Justement, comme chez nous!'Twas exactly the same with our Management! let us have done never fo well, we could not please every body: All I can fay, in our Defence, is, that though many good Judges, might possibly conceive how the State of the Stage might have been mended, yet the best of them never pretended, to remember the time when it was better! or could fnew us the way to make their imaginary Amendments practicable.

1

re nd

d-

l'd

to

ng.

on,

ing

ive,

has

low

s lit-

Cir-

the

ber-

given

rtain

vhich his For though I have often allowed, that our best Merit, as Actors, was never equal to that of our Prefecessors, yet I will venture to say, that in all its Branches, the Stage had never been under so just, so prosperous, and so settled a Regulation, for forty Years before, as it was at the Time I am speaking of. The most plausible Objection to our Adminiftration.

stration, seem'd to be, that we took no Care to breed up young Actors, to succeed us; and this was imputed as the greater Fault, because it was taken for granted, that it was a Matter as easy as planting so many Cabbages: Now might not a Court be as well reproach'd, for not breeding up a succession of com. plete Ministers? And yet it is evident, that if Providence, or Nature don't supply us with both, the State and the Stage will be but poorly supported. If a Man of an ample Fortune, should take it into his Head, to give a younger Son an extraordinary Al. lowance, in order to breed him a great Poet, what might not we suppose would be the Odds, that his Trouble, and Money, would be all thrown away? Not more, than it would be, against the Master of a Theatre, who should say, this, or that young Man, I will take care shall be an excellent Actor! Let it be our Excuse then, for that mistaken Charge against us; that fince there was no Garden, or Market, where accomplish'd Actors grew, or were to be fold, we could only pick them up, as we do Pebbles of Value, by Chance: We may polish a Thousand, before we find one, fit to make a Figure, in the Lid of a Snuff Box. And how few foever we were able to produce, it is no Proof, that we were not always in fearch of them: Yet, at worst, it was allow'd, that our Deficiency of Men Actors, was not so vifible, as our scarcity of tolerable Women: But when it is consider'd, that the Life of Youth and Beauty is too short for the bringing an Actress to her Perfection; were I to mention too, the many frail fair Ones, I remember, who, before they could arrive to their Theatrical Maturity, were feloniously stolen from the Tree, it would rather be thought our Mifforme, than our Fault, that we were not better provided.

Even the Laws of a Nunnery, we find, are thought no sufficient Security against Temptations, without iron Grates, and high Walls to inforce them; which the Architecture of a Theatre will not so properly admit of: And yet, methinks, Beauty

t hat

bi

th

to

it

fha

wa

Ma

AE

der

Book

Par

who

Pret

to t

ftron

ral o chos

Dru

faw ]

ties.

that has not those artificial Fortresses about it, that has no Desence but its natural Virtue (which upon the Stage has more than once been met with) makes a much more meritorious Figure, in Life, than that immur'd Virtue, which could never be try'd. But alas! as the poor Stage, is but the Show-glass to a Toy-shop, we must not wonder, if now and then, some of the Bawbles should find a Purchaser.

However, as to fay more, or less than Truth, are equally unfaithful in an Historian: I cannot but own. that in the Government of the Theatre, I have known many Instances, where the Merit of promising Actors has not always been brought forward, with the Regard, or Favour, it had a Claim to: And if I put my Reader in mind, that in the early Part of this Work. I have shewn, through what continued Difficulties, and Discouragements I myself made my way up the Hill of Preferment; he may justly call it, too throng a Glare of my Vanity: I am afraid he is in the right; but I pretend not to be one of those chaste Authors, that know how to write without it: When Truth is to be told it may be as much Chance, as Choice, if it happens to turn out in my Favour: But to shew that this was true of others, as well as myself, Booth shall be another Instance. In 1707, when Swiney was the only Master of the Company in the Hay-Market; Wilks, though he was, then, but an hired Actor himself, rather chose to govern, and give Orders, than to receive them; and was so jealous of Booth's rifing, that with a high Hand, he gave the Part of Pierre, in Venice Preserv'd, to Mills the elder. who (not to undervalue him) was out of Sight, in the Pretentions that Booth, then young, as he was, had to the same Part: And this very Discouragement so strongly affected him, that not long after, when feveral of us became Sharers with Swiney, Booth rather chose to risque his Fortune, with the old Patentee in Drury-Lane, than come into our Interest, where he faw he was like to meet with more of those Partialities. And yet again, Booth himself, when he came

3

.

-

1

to

n

1-

0-

re

15,

11

10

ty

ment to be blinded by his Inclination to Actors, whom the Town feem'd to have but an indifferent Opinion of. This again, inclines me ask another of my odd Questions, viz. Have we never feen the same Passions govern a Court! How many white Staffs, and great Places do we find, in our Histories, have been laid at the Feet of a Monarch, because they chose not to give way to a Rival, in Power, or hold a second Place in his Favour? How many Whigs, and Tories have chang'd their Parties, when their good or bad Pretentions have met with a Check to their higher Preferment?

Thus, we see, let the Degrees, and Rank of Men, be ever so unequal, Nature throws out their Passions, from the same Motives; 'tis not the Eminence, or Lowliness of either, that makes the one, when provok'd, more or less a reasonable Creature than the other: The Courtier, and the Comedian, when their Ambition is out of Humour, take just the same Mea-

er

lu

he

ha

ha

eft

hav

Ilo

tha

ince

fitie

that

for

eno

ake

lual

o h

Tale

rom

id

ligh

Dr.

Be

tho

fures to right themselves.

If this familiar Stile of talking should, in the Nostrils of Gravity, and Wisdom, smell a little too much of the Presumptuous, or the Pragmatical, I will, at least, descend lower, in my Apology for it, by calling to my, Assistance the old, humble Proverb, viz. Tis an ill Bird that, &c. Why then should I debase my Profession, by setting it in vulgar Lights, when I may shew it to more favourable Advantages? And when I speak of our Errors, why may I not extenuate them by islustrious Examples? or by not allowing them greater, than the greatest Man have been subject to? Or why, indeed, may I not suppose, that a sensible Reader will rather laugh, than look grave, at the Pomp of my Parallels?

Now, as I am tied down to the Veracity of an Historian, whose Facts cannot be supposed, like those sir'a Romance, to be in the Choice of the Author, to make them more marvellous, by Invention.

—O ye Immortal Bards?

What Hawock do these Blockheads make among your Works!

How are the boasted Labours of an Age,

Desac'd, and tortur'd, by ungracious Action?

Of this wicked Doings, Dryden too complains in one of his Prologues, at that time, where speaking of such lewd Actors, he closes a Couplet with the following Line, viz.

And murder Plays, which they miscal Reviving.

7

ir

a-

-10

ch

aft,

ny,

ill

ro-

nay

hen

hem

hem

to?

fible

the

f an

like

Au-

ation,

The great Share, therefore, that Wilks, by his exemplary Diligence, and Impatience of Neglect, in others had in the Reformation of this Evil, ought in lustice to be remember'd; and let my own Vanity here take Shame to itself, when I confess, That had I half his Application, I still think I might have shewn myself twice the Actor, that in my highest State of Favour, I appear'd to be. But, if I have any Excuse for that Neglect (a Fault, which if I loved not Truth, I need not have mentioned) it is that so much of my Attention was taken up in an incessant Labour to guard against our private Animolities, and preferve a Harmony, in our Management, that I hope, and believe, it made ample Amends, for what ever Omission, my Auditors might sometimes know it cost me some pains to conceal. But Nature akes care to bestow her Blessings, with a more eual Hand than Fortune does, and is feldom known heap too many upon one Man: One tolerable Talent, in an Individual, is enough to preserve him, rom being good for nothing; and, if that was not id to my Charge, as an Actor, I have in this ight too, less to complain of, than to be thankful Dr.

Before I conclude my History, it may be expected, should give some further View of these my last Cotem-Cotemporaries of the Theatre, Wilks, and Booth, in their different acting Capacities. If I were to paint them in the Colours they laid upon one another. their Talents would not be shewn with half the Commendation. I am inclin'd to bestow upon them, when they are left to my own Opinion. But People of the same Profession, are apt to see themselves, in their own clear Glass of Partiality, and look upon their Equals through a Mist of Prejudice. It might be imagin'd too, from the difference of their natural Tempers, that Wilks should have been more blind. to the Excellencies of Booth, than Booth was to those of Wilks : but it was not fo: Wilks would fometimes commend Booth to me; but when Wilks excell'd, the other was filent : Booth feem'd to think nothing valuable, that was not tragically great, or marvellous: Let that be as true, as it may; yet I have often thought, that from his having no Tafte of Humour himself, he might be too much inclin'd to depreciate the acting of it in others. The very flight Opinion, which in private Conversation with me, he had of Wilks's acting Sir Harry Wildair, was certainly more, than could be justified; not only from the general Applause that was against that Opinion (though Applause is not always infallible) but from the vinble Capacity which must be allow'd to an Actor, that could carry fuch flight Materials to fuch a height of Approbation: For though the Character of Wildain scarce in any one Scene, will stand against a just Criticism; yet in the Whole, there are so many gay, and false Colours of the fine Gentleman, that nothing but a Vivacity in the Performance, proportionally extravagant, could have made them fo happily glast upon a common Audience.

1

221

E

fo

ín

to

Wa

ter

I fe

tab!

four pen

ders

et i

C W

pone

ng

dis |

itou

vas

enter

its.

he fi

Wilks, from his first setting out, certainly form his manner of Acting, upon the Model of Monfort as Booth did his, on that of Betterton. But—Has passibus equis: I cannot say, either of them can up to their Original, Wilks had not that easy reglated Behaviour, or the harmonious Elocution of the same of th if I should happen to fink into a little farther Infignificancy, let the simple Truth of what I have farther to say, be my Excuse for it. I am oblig'd therefore, to make the Experiment, by shewing you the Conduct of our Theatrical Ministry in such Lights, as on various Occasions it appear'd in.

ıt

1,

n

ne

ir

be

ral

d, ofe

nes

'd,

ing

us :

ten

our

ate

ion,

1 of

inly

e ge-

dguo

VIII-

that

ht of

dair,

Cri-

gay,

thing

nably

glare

orm

nfort

Has

n can

reg

oft

Though Wilks had more Industry, and Application, than any Actor I had ever known, yet we found it possible that those necessary Qualities might sometimes be so misconducted, as not only to make them useless, but hurtful, to our Common-wealth; for while he was impatient to be foremost, in every thing, he frequently shock'd the honest Ambition of others, whose Measures might have been more serviceable, could his Jealoufy have given way to them. His own Regards for himself, therefore, were, to avoid a difagreeable Dispute with him, too often comply'd with: But this leaving his Diligence, to his own Conduct, made us, in some Instances, pay dearly for it: For Example; he would take as much, or more Pains in forwarding to the Stage, the Water-gruel Work of some infipid Author, that happen'd rightly to make his Court to him, than he would for the best Play, wherein it was not his Fortune to be chosen for the best Character. So great was his Impatience to be employ'd, that I scarce remember, in twenty Years, above one profitable Play, we could get to be reviv'd, wherein he found he was to make no confiderable Figure, independent of him: But the Tempest having done Wonders formerly, he could not form any Pretentions, to let it lie longer dormant: However, his Coldness to t was so visible, that he took all Occasions to postpone, and discourage its Progress, by frequently takng up the morning Stage with fomething more to is Mind. Having been myself particularly solliitous for the reviving this Play, Dogget (for this vas before Booth came into the Management) conented that the extraordinary Decorations, and Haits, should be lest to my Care, and Direction, as he fittest Person, whose Temper could jostle through Ff 2 the

the petulant Opposition, that he knew Wilks would be always offering to it, because he had but a middling Part in it, that of Ferdinand: Notwithstanding which, so it happen'd, that the Success of it shew'd (not to take from the Merit of Wilks) that it was possible to have good Audiences, without his extraordinary Assistance. In the first fix Days of act. ing it, we paid all our constant, and incidental Exrence, and shar'd each of us an hundred Pounds: The greatest Profit, that in so little a Time had yet been known within my Memory! But, alass! what was paltry Pelf, to Glory? That was the darling Passion of Wilks's Heart! and not to advance in it, was, to so jealous an Ambition, a painful Retreat, a meer Shade to his Laurels! and the common Benefit was but a poor Equivalent, to his want of particular Applause! To conclude, not Prince Lewis of Baden, though a Confederate General, with the Duke of Marlborough, was more inconsolable, upon the me morable Victory at Blenheim, at which he was not present, than our Theatrical Hero was, to see any Action prosperous, that he was not himself at the Head of. If this then was an Infirmity in Wills, why may not my shewing the same Weakness in so great a Man, mollify the Imputation, and keep his Memory in Countenance?

This laudable Appetite for Fame, in Wilks, wa not, however to be fed, without that conftant Labour, which only himself was able to come up to: He therefore bethought him of the means, to lessen the Fatigue, and at the same Time, to heighten his Reputation; which was by giving up now, and then, a Part to some raw Actor, who he was sure would disgrace it, and consequently put the Audience in mind of his superior Performance: Among this sort of Indulgences to young Actors, he happen'd once to make a Mistake, that set his Views in a clear Light. The best Criticks, I believe, will allow, that in Shakespear's Mackbeth, there are in the Part of Mackduff two Scenes, the one of Terror, in the second Act; and the other of

Compassion

1

t

0 fi

i

h

h

to di

of

M

to fe

be

Ex

inc

to

bu

No

we.

 $W_i$

to

mig

reti

felf

ning

it.

F

ftor

of a

t

.

at

it,

ar

n,

of 16-

ton

ny

he

ks,

fo

his

Wa

ur,

He

the

Re-

1, 2

dif-

ind

In-

ake

The

ar

nes,

er of

lion,

Compassion, in the fourth, equal to any that dramatick Poetry has produc'd: The Scenes Wilks had acted with Success, tho' far short of that happier Skill and Grace, which Monfort had formerly shewn, in them. Such a Part however, one might imagine would be one of the laft, a good Actor would chuse to part with: But Wilks was of a different Opinion; for Macheth was thrice as long, had more great Scenes of Action, and bore the Name of the Play: Now to be a fecond in any Play, was what he did not much care for, and had been feldom us'd to: This Part of Macduff, therefore, he had given to one Williams, as yet no extraordinary, though a promifing Actor. Williams, in the Simplicity of his Heart, immediately told Booth, what a Favour Wilks had done him. Booth, as he had reason, thought Wilks had here carried his Indulgence and his Authority a little too far; for as Booth had no better a Part, in the fame Play, than that of Banque, he found himself too much difregarded, in letting so young an Actor take Place of him: Booth, the efore, who knew the Value of Macduff, proposed to do it himself, and to give Banque to Williams; and to make him farther amends, offer'd him any other of his Parts that he thought might be of Service to him. Williams was content with the Exchange, and thankful for the Promise. This Scheme, indeed (had it taken Effect) might have been an Ease to Wilks, and possibly no Disadvantage to the Play; but foftly-That was not what we had a Mind to! No fooner then, came this Proposal to Wilks, but off went the Masque, and out came the Secret! For though-Wilks wanted to be eas'd of the Part, he did not defire to be excell'd in it; and as he was not fure but that might be the Case, if Booth were to act it, he wisely retracted his own Project, took Macduff again to himfelf, and while he liv'd, never had a Thought of running the same Hazard, by any farther Offer to resign it.

Here, I confess, I am at a Loss for a Fact in His flory, to which this can be a Parallel! To be weary of a Post, even to a real Desire of resigning it; and Ff-3 yet to chuse, rather to drudge on in it, than suffer it to be well supplied) though to share in that Advantage) is a Delicacy of Ambition, that Machiavil himself has made no mention of: Or if in old Rome, the Jealousy of any pretended Patriot, equally inclin'd to abdicate his Office, may have come up to it; 'tis more than my reading remembers.

As nothing can be more impertinent, than shewing too frequent a Fear, to be thought so, I will, without farther Apology, rather risque that Imputation, than not tell you another Story much to the same Purpose, and of no more Consequence than my last. To make you understand it however, a little Presace will be no-ceffary.

If the Merit of an Actor (as it certainly does) confifts more in the Quality, than the Quantity of his La. bour; the other Managers had no visible Reason to think, this needless Ambition of Wilks, in being so often, and fometimes fo unnecessarily employ'd, gave him any Title to a Superiority; especially when our Articles of Agreement, had allow'd us all to be equal. But what are narrow Contracts to great Souls with growing Defires. Wilks therefore, who thought himfelf lessen'd, in appealing to any Judgment, but his own, plainly discovered by his reftless Behaviour (though he did not care to speak out) that he thought he had a Right to some higher Confideration, for his Performance: This was often Booth's Opinion, as well as my own. It must be farther observ'd, that he actually had a separate Allowance of Fifty Pounds a Year, for writing our daily Play-Bills, for the Printer: Which Province, to fay the Truth, was the only one we car'd to truft to his particular Intendance, or could find out for a Pretence to diffinguish him. to speak a plainer Truth, this Pension, which was no part of our original Agreement, was merely paid to keep him quiet, and not that we thought it due to fo infignificant a Charge, as what a Prompter had formerly executed. This being really the Case, his fre-

1

C

0

0

F

P

I

of quent Complaints of being a Drudge to the Company, grew something more than disagreeable to us: For we could not digest the Imposition of a Man's setting himself to work, and then bringing in his own Bill for it. Booth, therefore, who was less easy, than I was, to see him so often setting a Merit upon this Quantity of his Labour, which neither could be our Interest, or his own, to lay upon him; proposed to me, that we might remove this pretended Grievance, by reviving some Play, that might be likely to live, and be easily acted, without Wilk's having any Part in it. About this Time, an unexpected Occasion ofser'd itself to put our Project, in practice: What sollow'd our Attempt, will be all (if any thing be) worth Observation in my Story.

1-

-

ne

to te

ig

ut

an

ke

6-

n-

2.

to 10

ve

nuc

al.

ith

m-

but

nuc

ght his

vell

ac-

sa innly

10

ut,

ne

to

01-

fre-

ent

In 1725, we were call'd upon, in a manner, that could not be refisted, to revive the Provok'd Wife, a Comedy, which, while we found our Account, in keeping the Stage clear of those loose Liberties, it had formerly, too justly been charg'd with; we had laid afide, for fome Years. The Author, Sir John Vanbrugh, who was conscious of what it had too much of, was prevail'd upon, to substitute a new written Scene in the Place of one, in the fourth Act, where the Wantonness of his Wit and Humour had (originally) made a Rake talk like a Rake, in the borrow'd Habit of a Clergyman: To avoid which Offence, he clapt the same Debauchee, into the Undress of a Woman of Quality: Now the Character and Profession of a Fine 1 ady, not being so indelibly sacred as that of a Churchman; whatever Follies he expos'd, in the Fetticoat, kept him at least clear of his former Prophanenels, and were now innocently ridiculous, to the Spectator.

This Play being thus refitted for the Stage, was, as I have observed, call'd for from Court, and by many of the Nobility. Now, then, we thought was a proper Time to come to Explanation with Wilks: Accordingly, when the Actors were summon'd to hear the Play read, and receive their Parts; I address'd my felf to Wilks, before them all, and told him, That as the Part of Conflant, which he feem'd to chuse. was a Character of less Action, than he generally appear'd in, we thought this might be a good Occasion to ease himself, by giving it to another -Here he look'd grave: That the Love-Scenes of it were rather ferious than gay, or humourous, and therefore might fit very well upon Booth .- Down dropt his Brow, and furl'd were his Features. That if we were never to revive a tolerable Play, without him, what would become of us, in ease of his Indisposition? Here he pretended to ftir the Fire. That as he could have no farther Advantage or Advancement, in his Station to hope for, his acting in this Play was but giving himself an unprofitable Trouble, which neither Booth, or I, defired to impose upon him. Softly. Now the Pill began to gripe him. ___ In a Word, this provoking Civility, plung'd him into a Passion, which he was no longer able to contain; out it came, with all the Equipage of unlimited Language, that on fuch Occasions his Displeasure usually fet out with; but when his Reply was stript of those Ornaments, it was plainly this: That he look'd upon all I had faid, as a concerted Defign, not only to fignalize our felves, by laying him afide; but a Contrivance to draw him into the Disfavour of the Nobility, by making it suppos'd his own Choice, that he did not act in a Play so particularly ask'd for; but we should and, he could stand upon his own Bottom, and it was not all our little caballing should get our ends of him : To which I answer'd with some Warmth, That he was mistaken in our Ends; for those, Sir, said I, you have answer'd already, by shewing the Company, you cannot bear to be left out of any Play. Are not you every Day complaining of your being over-labour'd? And now, upon our first offering to ease you, you fly into a Passion, and pretend to make that a greater Grievance, than t'other: But, Sir, if your being In, or Out of the Play, is a Hardship, you shall impole

I

P

0

to

al

m kr

W

act

be

the

it (

an

impose it upon your felf: The Part is in your Hand, and to us it is a Matter of indifference now, whether you take it, or leave it. Upon this he threw down the Part upon the Table, cross'd his Arms, and fate knocking his Heel, upon the Floor, as feeming to threaten most, when he said least; but when no Body persuaded him to take it up again, Booth not chusing to push the matter too far, but rather to split the Difference of our Dispute, said, That for his Part, he saw no such great matter in acting every Day; for he believed it the wholesomest Exercise in the World; it kept the Spirits in motion, and always gave him a good Stomach. Tho' this was, in a manner, giving up the Part to Wilks, yet it did not allow, he did us any Favour in receiving it. Here I observ'd Mrs. Oldfield began to titter, behind her Fan: But Wilks being more intent, upon what Booth had faid, reply'd, Every one could best feel for himself, but he did not pretend to the Strength of a Pack-horse; therefore if Mrs. Oldfield would chuse any Body else to play with her, he should be very glad to be excus'd: This throwing the Negative upon Mrs. Oldfield, was, indeed, a fure way to fave himself; which I could not help taking notice of, by faying, It was making but an ill Compliment, to the Company, to suppose, there was but one Man in it, fit to play an ordinary Part with her. Here Mrs. Oldfield got up, and turning me half round to come forward, faid with her usual Frankness, Pooh! you are all a Parcel of Fools, to make such a rout about nothing! Rightly judging, that the Person, most out of humour, would not be the more displeas'd at her calling us all by the fame Name. knew, too, the best way of ending the Debate, would be to help the Weak; she said, she hop'd Mr. Wilks would not fo far mind what had past, as to refuse his acting the Part, with her; for though it might not be so good as he had been us'd to; yet, she believed, those who had bespoke the Play, would expect to have it done to the best Advantage, and it would make but an odd Story abroad, if it were known, there had

1

d

19

.

18

u

1, ot

a-

u,

2

ur

all ofe

been any Difficulty in that Point among our felves. To conclude, Wilks had the Part, and we had all we wanted; which was an Occasion to let him see that the Accident or Choice of one Manager's being more employ'd than another, would never be allow'd a Pretence, for altering our Indentures, or his having an extraordinary Confideration for it.

However disagreeable it might be, to have this un. fociable Temper daily to deal with; yet I cannot but fay, that from the same impatient Spirit, that had fo often hurt us, we still drew valuable Advantages: For as Wilks feem'd to have no Joy, in Life, beyond his being diflinguish'd on the Stage; we were not only fure of his always doing his best, there himself; but of making others more careful, than without the Rod of so irascible a Temper over them, they would have been. And I much question, if a more temperate, or better Usage of the hired Actors, could have so effectually kept them to Order. Not even Betterton (as we have feen) with all his good Senfe, his great Fame, and Experience, could, by being only a quiet Example of Industry himself, save his Company from falling, while neither Gentleness could govern, or the Confideration of their common Interest reform them. Diligence, with much the Inferior Skill, or Capacity, will beat the best negligent Company, that ever came upon a Stage. But when a certain dreaming Idleness, or jolly Negligence of Rehearsals gets into a Body of the Ignorant, and Incapable (which before Wilks came into Drury-Lane, when Powell was at the Head of them, was the Case of that Company then, I fay, a fenfible Spectator might have look'd upon the fallen Stage, as Portius, in the Play of Cato, does upon his ruin'd Country, and have lamented it, in (something near) the same Exclamation, viz.

- 0 y

ti

a

to

aı

be

pr

tri

at

Bo

Ma

rov hav

tim

teni

the

and

quer

Har

Line mon t: S imes

oth

CIV2

200 Shour bliness at long legisle very

Last in a little world blank

One, nor Booth that conscious Aspect of Intelligence, nor requisite Variation of Voice, that made every Line the Other spoke seem his own, natural, self deliver'd Sentiment: Yet there is still room for great Commendation of both the first mentioned; which will not be so much diminish'd, in my having said, they were only excell'd by such Predecessors, as it will be rais'd, in venturing to affirm, it will be a longer time, before any Successors will come near them. Thus one of the greatest Praises given to Virgil is, That no Successor in Poetry, came so near Him, as He himself did to Homer.

n.

ut

ad

:

nd

ly

ut

od

ve

te,

fo

ton his

y a

m-

go-

re-

zill,

any,

tain

rfals

hich

was

any ok'd

Cato,

d it,

OM

Tho' the Majority of publick Auditors are but bad Judges of Theatrical Action, and are often deceiv'd into their Approbation of what has no folid Pretence to it; yet, as there are no other appointed Judges to appeal to, and as every fingle Spectator has a Right to be one of them, their Sentence will be definitive. and the Merit of an Actor must, in some degree, be weigh'd by it: By this Law then, Wilks was pronounc'd an Excellent Actor; which if the few true Judges did not allow him to be, they were at least too candid to flight, or discourage him. Booth and he were Actors so directly opposite in their Manner, that, if either of them could have borrow'd a little of the other's Fault, they would both have been improv'd by it: If Wilks had sometimes too violent a Vivacity; Booth as often contented himself with too grave a Dignity: The Latter feem'd too much to heave up his Words, as the other to dart them to the Far, with too quick, and sharp a Vehemence; Thus Wilks would too frequently break into the Time, and Measure of the Harmony, by too many spirited Accents, in one line; and Booth, by too folemn a Regard to Harnony, would as often lose the Necessary Spirit of t: So that (as I have observ'd) cou'd we have someimes rais'd the one, and funk the other, they had oth been nearer to the Mark. Yet this could not e always objected to them: They had their Inervals of unexceptionable Excellence, that more, than balanc'd their Errors. The Master-piece of Booth was Othello: There, he was most in Cha. racter, and feem'd not more to animate, or please himself, in it, than his Spectators. 'Tis true he ow'd his last, and highest Advancement, to his acting Cato: But it was the Novelty, and critical appearance of that Character, that chiefly swell'd the Torrent of his Applaule: For let the Sentiments of a declaiming Patriot have all the Sublimity, that Poetry can raise them to; let them be deliver'd too, with the utmost Grace, and Dignity of Elocution, that can recommend them to the Auditor; Yet this is but one Light, wherein the Excellence of an Actor can shine; But in Othello we may see him, in the variety of Nature: There the Actor is carried through the different Accidents of domestick, Happiness, and Misery, occafionally torn, and tortur'd by the most distracting Paffion, that can raise Terror, or Compassion, in the Spectator. Such are the Characters, that a Mafter Actor would delight in; and therefore in Othello, I may fafely aver, that Booth shew'd himself thrice the Actor, that he could in Cato. And yet his Merit in acting Cato need not be diminish'd by this Comparison.

Gg

Wilks often regretted, that in Tragedy, he had not the full and strong Voice of Booth to command, and grace his Periods with: But Booth us'd to fay, That if his Ear had been equal to it, Wilks had Voice enough to have shewn himself a much better Tragedian. Now though there might be some Truth in this; yet these two Actors were of so mixt a Merit, that even, in Tragedy, the Superiority was not always on the fame fide: In Sorrow, Tenderness, or Refignation, Wilks plainly had the Advantage, and seem'd more pathetically to feel, look, and express his Calamity: But, in the more turbulent Transports of the Heart, Booth again bore the Palm, and lest all Competitors behind him. A Fact perhaps will set this Difference, in a clearer Light. I have formerly feen Wilks act Otbello, and Booth the Earl of Essex, in which they both miscarried: Neither the exclamatory Rage, or Jealousy of the one, or the plaintive Distresses of the other, were happily executed, or became either of them; tho in the contrary Characters, they were both excellent.

When an Actor becomes, and naturally Looks the Character he stands in. I have often observ'd it to have had as fortunate an Effect, and as much recommended him to the Approbation of the common Auditors, as the most correct, or judicious Utterance of the Sentiments: This was strongly visible, in the favourable Reception Wilks met with in Hamlet, where I own the half of what he spoke, was as painful to my Ear, as every Line, that came from Betterton was charming; and yet it is not imposfible, could they have come to a Poll, but Wilks might have had a Majority of Admirers: However, fuch a Division had been no Proof, that the Præeminence had not still remain'd in Betterton; and if I should add, that Booth too, was behind Betterton in Othello, it would be faying no more, than Booth himself had Judgment, and Candour enough to know, and confess. And if both he, and Wilks, are allow'd in the two above-mention'd Characters, a second Place, to so great a Master, as Betterton, it will be a Rank of Praise, that the best Actors, fince my Time might have been proud of.

.

n 2-

6, ce

118

115

ad

nd.

ay,

ter

uth

rit,

not

Or

and

refs

an.

lm,

Fact

ght.

Rooth

the

I am now come towards the End of that Time, through which our Affairs had long gone forward in a settled course of Prosperity. From the visible Errors of former Managements, we had, at last, found the necessary Means to bring our private Laws, and Orders, into the general Observance, and Approbation of our Society: Diligence, and Neglect, were under an equal Eye: the one never fail'd its Reward, and the other, by being very rarely excus'd, was less frequently committed. You are now to consider us in our height of Favour, and so much in fashion, with the Politer part of the Town, that our House, every Saturday, seem'd to be the appointed Assembly of the First Ladies of Quality: Of this too, the common Spectators were so well apprized, that for twenty Years successively, on that Day, we scarce ever fail'd of a crowded Audience; for which Occasion we particularly reserved our best Plays, acted in the best manner we could give them.

Gg 2

much

Among our many necessary Reformations; what not a little preserv'd to us the Regard of our Auditors, was the Decency of our clear Stage; from whence we had now, for many Years, shut out those idle Gentlemen, who feem'd more delighted to be pretty Objects themselves, than capable of any Pleafure, from the Play: Who took their daily Stands, where they might best elbow the Actor, and come in for their Share of the Auditors Attention. In many a labour'd Scene of the warmest Humour, and of the most affecting Passion, have I seen the best Actors disconcerted, while these buzzing Muscatos have been fluttering round their Eyes, and Ears. How was it possible an Actor, so embarrass'd, should keep his Impatience, from entering into that different Temper which his personated Character might require him to be Master of?

2

th

21 hi

die

m

the

to hir

ro

Future Actors may perhaps wish I would set this Grievance, in a stronger Light; and, to say the Truth, where Auditors are ill-bred, it cannot well be expected, that Actors should be polite. Let me therefore shew, how far an Artist in any Science is apt to be hurt by any sort of Inattention to his Performance.

While the famous Corelli, at Rome, was playing fome Musical Composition of his own, to a select Company in the private Apartment of his Patron-Cardinal, he observed, in the height of his Harmony, his Eminence was engaging, in a detach'd Conversation; upon which he suddenly stops short, short, and gently laid down his Instrument: The Cardinal, surprized at the unexpected Cessation, asked him if a String was broke? To which, Corelli in an honest Conscience of what was due to his Musick, reply'd, No, Sir, I was only assaid I interrupted Business. His Eminence, who knew that a Genius could never shew itself to Advantage, where it had not its proper Regards, took this Reproof in good part, and broke off his Conversation, to hear the whole Concerts play'd over again.

1-10 eft

Ve

at

u-

m

ofe

be

ea-

ds.

me

In

ur,

the

luf-

and

oar-

ing

ated

ıster

fet

fay

not

lite.

any

tion

ying

eled

Pa-

his

de-

flopt hort,

Another Story will let us fee, what Effect a mistaken Offence of this Kind had upon the French Theatre; which was told me by a Gentleman of the long Robe, then at Paris, and who was himself the innocent Author of it. At the Tragedy of Zaire; while the celebrated Mademoifelle Goffin was delivering a Soliloquy, this Gentleman was feized with a sudden Fit of Coughing, which gave the Actres some Surprize, and Interruption; and his Fit increafing, the was forced to fland filent so long, that it drew the Eyes of the uneasy Audience upon him; when a French Gentleman leaning forward to him, ask'd him, If this Actress had given him any particular Offence, that he took to publick an Occafion to resent it? The English Gentleman, in the utmost Surprize, assured him, So far from it, that he was a particular Admirer of her Performance; that his Malady was his real Misfortune, and if he apprehended any Return of it, he would rather quit his Seat, than disoblige either the Actress, or the Audience.

This publick Decency in their Theatre, I have my felf seen carried so far, that a Gentleman in their second Loge, or Middle-Gallery, being observed to sit forward himself, while a Lady sat behind him, a loud Number of Voices call'd out to him, from the Pit, Place à Dame! Place à Dame! When the Person so offending, either not apprehending

Gg 3

hending the Meaning of the Clamour, or possibly being some John Trott, who fear'd no Man alive, the Noise was continued for several Minutes; nor were the Actors, though ready on the Stage, suffer'd to begin the Play, till this unbred Person was laugh'd out of his Seat, and had placed the Lady before him.

Whether this Politeness, observed at Plays, may be owing to their Clime, their Complexion, or their Government, is of no great Consequence; but, if it is to be acquired, methinks it is Pity our accomplished Countrymen, who every Year, import so much of this Nation's gawdy Garniture, should not, in this long Course of our Commerce with them, have brought over a little of their Theatrical Good-breeding too.

I have been the more copious upon this Head, that it might be judged, how much it stood us upon, to have got rid of those improper Spectators, I have been speaking of: For whatever Regard we might draw by keeping them at a Distance, from our Stage, I had observed, while they were admitted behind our Scenes, we but too often shew'd them the wrong side of our Tapestry; and that many a tolerable Actor was the less valued when it was known, what ordinary Stuff he was made of.

Among the many more disagreeable Distresses that are almost unavoidable, in the Government of a Theatre, those we so often met with from the Persecution of bad Authors, were what we could never entirely get rid of. But let us state both our Cases, and then see, where the Justice of the Complaint lies. 'Tis true, when an ingenious Indigent had taken, perhaps, a whole Summer's Pains, invitâ Minervâ, to heap up a Pile of Poetry, into the Likeness of a Play, and sound, at last, the gay Promise of his Winter's Support, was rejected, and abortive, a Man almost ought to be a Poet himself, to be justly sensible of his Distress! Then, indeed,

0

d

d

re

ly

ir

h

in

ve

d-

at

n,

ve

ht

e, ur

ng

le

at

at

he ld th

he

n.

ns,

to

ay nd

n-

n,

indeed, great Allowances ought to be made for the severe Reflections, he might naturally throw upon those pragmatical Actors, who had no Sense, or Taste And yet, if his Relief was only of good Writing. to be had, by his imposing a bad Play upon a good Set of Actors, methinks the Charity that first looks at home, has as good an Excuse for its Coldness, as the unhappy Object of it, had a Plea for his being reliev'd, at their Expence. But immediate Want was not always confess'd their Motive for Writing ; Fame, Honour, and Parnassian Glory had sometimes taken a romantick Turn in their Heads; and then they gave themselves the Air of talking to us in a higher Strain—Gentlemen were not to be fo treated! the Stage was like to be finely govern'd, when Actors pretended to be Judges of Authors, &c. But dear Gentlemen! if they were good Actors, why not? How should they have been able to act, or rife to any Excellence, if you suppos'd them not to feel, or understand what you offer'd them? Would you have reduc'd them, to the meer Mimickry of Parrots, and Monkies, that can only prate, and play a great many pretty Tricks, without Reflection? Or how are you fure, your Friend, the infallible Judge, to whom you read your fine Piece, might be fincere in the Praises he gave it? Or, indeed, might not you have thought the best Judge a bad one if he had disliked it? Consider too, how possible it might be, that a Man of Sense would not care to tell you a Truth, he was fure you would not believe! And, if neither Dryden, Congreve, Steele, Addison, not Farguhar, (if you please) ever made any Complaint of their Incapacity to judge, why is the World to believe the Slights you have met with from them, are either undeserv'd, or particular? Indeed! indeed, I am not conscious that we ever did you. or any of your Fraternity, the least Injustice! Yet this was not all we had to struggle with; to superfede our Right of rejecting, the Recommendation, or rather Imposition of some great Persons (whom it was not Prudence to disoblige) sometimes came in, with a high Hand, to support their Pretensions; and then, cout que cout acted it must be! So when the short Life of this wonderful Nothing was over, the Actors were, perhaps, abus'd in a Presace, for obstructing the Success of it, and the Town publickly damn'd us, for our private Civility.

I cannot part, with these fine Gentlemen Authors, without mentioning a ridiculous Disgraecia, that befel one of them, many Years ago: This folemn Bard. who like Bayes, only writ for Fame, and Reputation on the second Day's publick Triumph of his Muse. marching in a stately full bottom'd Perriwig into the Lobby of the House, with a Lady of Condition in his Hand, when raising his Voice to the Sir Fopling Sound, that became the Mouth of a Man of Quality, and calling out-Hey! Box-keeper, where is my Lady fuch a-one's Servant, was unfortunately answer'd, by honeit John Trott, (which then happen'd to be the Box-keeper's real Name) Sir, we have difmis'd, there was not Company enough to pay Candles. In which mortal Astonishment, it may be sufficient to leave him. And yet had the Actors refus'd this Play, what Refentment might have been thought too fevere for them ?

Thus was our Administration often censured for Accidents, which were not in our Power to prevent: A possible Case, in the wisest Governments. If therefore some Plays have been preferr'd to the Stage, that were never sit to have been seen there, let this be our best Excuse for it. And yet, if the Merit of our rejecting the many bad Plays, that press'd hard upon us, were weigh'd against the few, that were thus imposed upon us, our Conduct, in general, might have more Amendments of the Stage to boast of than Errors to answer for. But it is now Time to drop the Curtain.

During

to

During our four last Years, there happen'd so very little unlike what has been said before, that I shall conclude with barely mentioning those unavoidable Accidents, that drew on our Dissolution. The first, that for some Years had led the way to greater, was the continued ill State of Health, that render'd Booth incapable of appearing on the Stage. The next was the Death of Mrs. Oldfield, which happen'd on the z3d of October, 1730. About the same time too Mrs. Porter, then in her highest Reputation for Tragedy, was lost to us, by the Missortune of a dislocated Limb, from the overturning of a Chaise. And our last Stroke was the Death of Wilks, in September, the Year following, 1731.

Notwithstanding such irreparable Losses; whether, when these favourite Actors, were no more to be had, their Successors might not be better born with, than they could possibly have hop'd, while the former were in being; or that the generality of Spectators, from their want of Tafte, were easier to be pleas'd, than the few that knew better: Or that, at worst, our Actors were still preferable to any other Company, of the feveral, then fubfifting: Or to whatever cause it might be imputed, our Audiences were far less abated, than our apprehensions had suggested. So that, though it began to grow late in Life with me; having still Health, and Strength enough, to have been as useful on the Stage, as ever, I was under no visible Neceffity of quitting it: But so it happen'd that our furviving Fraternity having got some chime ical, and as I thought, unjust Notions into their Heads, which though I knew they were without much Difficulty to be furmounted; I chose not, at my time of Day, to enter into new Contentions; and, as I found an Inclination in some of them, to purchase the whole power of the Patent into their own Hands; I did my best, while I staid with them, to make it worth their while to come up to my Price; and then patiently fold out my Share, 346 The Life of Mr. Colley Cieber, &c.

Share, to the first Bidder, wishing the Crew, I had left in the Vessel, a good Voyage.

What Commotions the Stage fell into the Year following, or from what Provocations, the greatest Part of the Actors revolted, and fet up for themfelves, in the little House, in the Hay-Market, lie not within the Promise of my Title-page to relate; or as it might set some Persons living, in a Light, ativ they possibly might not chuse to be seen in, I will rather be thankful, for the involuntary Fr your they have done me, than trouble the Publick with private Complaints of fancied, or real Inju-

er

nd

Var

ive

alc Min

Dit Rol 1 The

Poe

Dit

1 0. 41 1 y 011 16 ... FINIS.

OOKS lately published, and fold by the Printer hereof.

had

Year

atef

nem-

lies late;

ight,

n, I

Falick,

nju-

Anconder, the near DAMELA: or, Virtue Rewarded. In a Series of Familiar Letters from a Beautiful Young damsel, to her Parents. Now first Published, in orer to cultivate the Principles of Virtue and Religion the Minds of the Youth of Both Sexes. A Narative which has its Foundation in Truth and Nature: nd at the same time that it agreeably entertains, by a Variety of curious and affecting Incidents, is entirely ivested of all those Images, which, in too many Pieces alculated for Amusement only, tend to inflame the finds they should instruct, 2 Vols. 12mo. 5 s. 5 d. The Works of J. S. D. D. D. S. P. D. in 6 Vols. 1 1. 105. Byo. Ditto, 6 neat Pocket Vols. 12mo. 16 s. 3 d. Rollin's Method of teaching and studying the Belles Lettres, 4 Vols. The Bachelor of Salamanca, or the Memoirs of Don Cherubim de la Ronda; containing many delightful Novels, 2 Vols. By Mr. Le Sage, Author of Gil-Blas, and the Devil upon Two Sticks. 4s. 4d. History of England and Ireland by way of Question and Answer. 25. 2 da Poems on several Occasions in 8vo. by the Rev. J. S. D. D. D. S. P. D. 5 s. 5 d. Ditto in 12mo. 25. 8d. ravels into feveral remote Nations of the World. By Capt. Lemuel Gulliver. 2 s. 8 d. The Memoirs of Signior Gaudentio di Lucca. from his Confession and Examination before the Fathers of the Inquisition. 2 s. 8 d. The Cupid. A Collection of three hundred of the most beautiful Love Songs in the English Language, in 12 Parts, suited to 12 different Sorts of Lovers, viz. The Female Lover, the admiring Lover, the flighted Lover, the modest Lover, the constant Lo-

CATALOGUE.

ver, the jealous Lover, the tender Lover,	the whining Lover, the faucy Lover, the merry L	over, the pressing Lover, and the happy Lover.	2 s. 2 d.
The Turkish Spy, 8 Vols.	17 s.
Jacob's Law Tables	2 s. 8 d.
Thoughts on Religion, and other various Sub	iects. Ru
M. Pafcal, 8vo.	45. 44.
The Pantheon	2s. 6d.
Father Paul on Ecclefiastical Benefices and	Tythes with an Account of his Life, 8vo.	43. 4d.
The Plain Dealer	25. 24.
Miscellaneous Works of his Excellency Matth Efq; in z Vols. Vol. I. containing the I	History of his own Time. Compiled from his own Ma	nuscrinte Revised and figned by himself. Vol. II. c	ontaining a new Collection of Poems, confisting of	Epifles Tales, Satyrs, Epigrams, &c. Never befo	ore publi-fhed.	5 s. 5 d.
The Life of the Duke of Berwick,	3 s. 3 d.
Voltaire's Letters concerning the English Nation	23. 34.
Pope's Works, 3 Vols. 12mo.	6s. 6d.
Ditto, I etters, 2 Vols.
Compleat Family Piece, containing many hus	45. 4d.
ceipts in Physick, Surgery, Cookery,	Hunting Hawking, Fishing, Fowling, Husbandry,	Garden. and the second second
ing, &c.	35. 34.
Baron Pollniz's Memoirs, 5 Vols.	Der John
The History of Peter I. Emperor of Russia,	by John Mottley, Efg; embelished with curious From	ntilpieces, an accurate Map of the Ruffian Empire, a	nd leveral other Copper-Plates, representing a Prosp	C Determ City of Moscow, a Plan of the City of	I Peters.
burgh, the For ress of Cronslot, and the	different Habits and Customs of the several Nations	Tubject to that Empire, &c. In three neat Pocket	Volumes.
0 - 111 - 111 L - 1110 1 A TT - 10 FA	25. 94.
Speedily will be published, A Treatise of the and False Money of the Romans. To which is annexed, a Differtation upon the Manner of diffinguishing Antique Medals from counterfeit ones.

Translated from the Original printed at Paris, 1740.

hinthe
2 d.
17 s.
18 d.
18 d